Heavy Guard Directs Jaworski To Gardner

ADMITS PART IN SHARPSBURG SHOOTING

Across the Bridge of Sighs guarded by detectives Dave Carlin and John Geisler went Sam Jaworski, the accused liberator, to submit to a grilling by District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner. But Jaworski said nothing—refused to admit that he had directed the jail delivery of his brother, Paul Jaworski, and Jack Vasbinder. His visit did bring out that he had been arrested here three years ago for a Sharpsburg shooting to which Paul later confessed.

HELEN KLINE

"Save me, Carlo!" cried Helen Kline to Carlo De Basi, Strip gangster, as she was held in Morals Court this morning, but Carlo didn't. He was in difficulties himself, being charged with assaulting Helen's father.

Girl's Pleas Fail

Accused of smashing a lock, thus forcing his way into the home of Peter Kline, 1333 Penn avenue, to keep a tryst with Kline's 15-year-old daughter Helen, and of slugging Kline when the latter caught him under the girl's bed, Carlo DeBasi, alias Carl Kelly, noted political gang fighter of the "Strip," was held for the grand jury on charges of breaking and entering a building and aggravated assault and battery, after a dramatic hearing in Morals Court today.

The girl joined with Kelly in denying the charges. She declared that the police had "put her father up" to prosecuting Carlo, with whom she gave every evidence of being frantically in love. She was held for the juvenile court on a disorderly conduct charge.

As Magistrate A. D. Brandon announced his decision in the case and the girl was being led away she created a dramatic scene. "Save me, Carlo! Don't let them take me!" The court room rang with her screams.

Kline, a portly, bespectacled man, who had served as interpreter for a Polish woman in a case heard earlier in the day, said that on returning home on the evening of October 10 he found the lock of the door broken. He searched the house with his young son and later, poking a flashlight under a bed in Helen's room, found DeBasi there. The latter, according to the father, resisted their efforts to hold him, and, by using his fists, succeeded in escaping.

JUDGE KAVANAUGH, of Illinois, calls this "the most law ridden and lawless of nations."

"Lawyers," says he, "are organized to get around the law and save criminals through technicalities."

Lawyers evidently earn their money, and our glorious democracy seems to be the murderer's paradise.

KILL a man, and odds are six to one you will not be caught. If caught, odds are twelve to one you will not be convicted.

Seventy-two to one in favor of the murderer must encourage crimes. Judge Kavanaugh, who is a lawyer, says we send too many lawyers to Congress.

ROUGH and rocky is prohibition's road. Police Chief Hughes of Chicago says: "My men will catch crooks; won't waste time snooping for pocket flasks. There is no more chance of drying up Chicago than there is of my flying without wings."

He points a finger at each man interviewing him, asking: "Do you obey the Volstead act? Do you? Do you?" They say the act was made for somebody else, not for them.

IN Detroit, Mayor Smith, running for re-election, asks only that men of Detroit "vote as they drink."

He is against prohibition, promises to make Detroit wetter, not dryer. And his friends point with pride to the fact that nobody in Detroit has been killed by "poison booze" for months, because Mayor Smith lets them get "the real stuff" from Canada. Nevertheless, prohibition will be here, when Mayor Smith and Chief Hughes are gone.

LAST week an Italian flier, Mario de Bernardi, broke all records for speed. In a Macchi seaplane he averaged more than 300 miles an hour on four successive flights, breaking the world's record by 19¼ miles.

SOME will say: "Oh, but such speed is terribly dangerous. Nobody will ever fly SAFELY at five miles a minute!"

When the locomotive appeared, solemn engineers said: "A continuous speed of 25 miles an hour would be fatal to human life." And, also: "The terrible wind created by the rushing trains would kill people along the tracks."

MEN, women, children and nice old ladies will travel through the upper air at five miles a minute, and TEN miles a minute, more safely and smoothly than they now travel one mile a minute in automobiles and railroad trains.

ALBERT EDWARD DAVIES, 28, was told by doctors that his 3-year-old daughter must die of septic pneumonia; it was only a matter of days, the child was in dreadful agony. The father drowned her in the bathtub to

LOVED MAN SHE KILLED, HUSBAND SLAYER SOBS

MRS. ELEANOR CROOKS HOLBY

"Oh, don't say anything mean about my poor Joe. I loved him. He was so good to me when he was sober."

Poor little Mrs. Joseph Holby, eyes swollen from weeping, and trembling with a nervous chill, begged that her friends and neighbors be kind to her husband in death.

She is only 26 years of age, but might easily be mistaken for 40.

It was in the detective bureau this morning where she was being held for the coroner's jury after a hearing in Morals Court. She admitted quite readily that she held the knife upon which her husband plunged and met his death in their home at 1018 Spring Garden avenue last evening.

There is little doubt the killing was

Three Saved From Gas

A chance visit of a relative probably saved the family of B. F. Woods, Flora street, North Side, from death by carbon monoxide poisoning. Woods, most seriously affected, is in St. John's General Hospital after police used a pulmotor for more than an hour. His wife, and daughter, Catherine, 9, recovered after being attended by Dr. H. E. Ramsey, 3715 California avenue.

Retiring Saturday night, the family left a gas heater in the cellar burning. When Mrs. Wood's brother called at the house at 3:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon he found the doors locked and after repeated poundings finally aroused Mrs. Woods. She staggered to the door and let him in.

BY WIRELESS FROM THE S. S. LIMA, Oct. 24.—I do not believe that I will be able accurately to convey to anyone the thoughts which went through my mind in the next 30 minutes while we were in the water and before we were taken aboard the Barendrecht.

We had placed a rubber cover over the filler cap of the main gas tank and because it was empty of gasoline we did not believe our plane would ride very low in the waves. We found out differently, for in the next instant a huge wave had completely submerged us.

Water rushed in the front windows and through the hole which I had cut in the fuselage. I dove through the hole and out from under the wing as I saw George scramble from under the controls and attempt to open the cabin door. I was afraid the wing would pin him under the water. But the next moment I saw his hand grasp the trailing edge of the wing, then he came up, blowing salt water and shaking his head and I was much relieved.

We pulled ourselves along the side of the fuselage until we had reached the tail and another big wave boosted

SAM DREYFUSS TO WED IN MEMPHIS TONIGHT

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 24.—Samuel W. Dreyfuss, secretary of the Pittsburgh Pirate Baseball Club and son of Owner Barney, will be married to Miss Carolyn Wolf, of Paragould, Ark., at a brilliant wedding ceremony at the Peabody Hotel here at 7:30 tonight. Sam hit a homer with the bases loaded, for besides being an accomplished and talented young lady, the new Mrs. Dreyfuss is a beautiful southerner. She is a graduate of the University of Lausanne, Switzerland, at which school she completed her education, and the daughter of Joseph Wolf, Arkansas chain store magnate.

The romance began a few years ago when Miss Wolf visited her brother, Irwin D. Wolf, friend of the younger Dreyfuss, at Pittsburgh.

Following the wedding ceremony, to be performed by Rabbi Harry W. Ettleson, the couple will leave for New York. They will embark for Europe October 29, on their honeymoon and upon their return will make their home in Pittsburgh.

The wedding is heralded as one of the brilliant functions to open the Memphis season. Among the out-of-town guests are Mr. and Mrs. Barney Dreyfuss, Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Wolf, Mr. and Mrs. William Benswanger, Mrs. Nathan Kaufman, Miss Marian Louise and Miss Elizabeth Kaufman, Mrs. S. L. Joseph, John Cohn and James Adler, all of Pittsburgh.

TELLS TALE OF ABUSE

Mrs. Eleanor Crooks Holby, 26, who slew her husband, Joseph Holby, 37, at their home, 1018 Spring Garden avenue, North Side, says that he had been drinking heavily and abusing her periodically,.

DETECTIVE WITH FATAL WEAPON

Detective P. E. Moran has the weapon with which the homicide was committed,. Mrs,. Holby avers that she was using it to cut bread and had no intention of injuring her husband. It plunged into his chest, she says, as he rushed forward to beat her.

SHE MOURNS HIS DEATH

As she sat in detectives' headquarters today, awaiting developments, Mrs. Holby's thoughts were with "poor Joe," as she called him. She was apparently far more wretched over her bereavement than over her own plight, though protesting her innocence.

COMMITTED TO JAIL

Mrs. Holby waived preliminary hearing in Morals Court and was committed to the county jail to await the action of the coroner,, he taking of her formal statement by the homicide squad will be followed by the holding of the inquest. Whether they believed her innocent, the detectives did not say, but they were inclined to be gentle with Mrs. Holby.

SHOW HOW DEAL WAS HIDDEN

By GEORGE E. DURNO,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—The prosecutioin drove home another important point in the Fall-Sinclair oil conspiracy trial today when it developed that the oil magnate had paid $1,000,000 for quit claims on the Teapot Dome naval reserve which former Secretary of Interior Albert B. Fall already knew were absolutely invalid.

The defense holds that these claims were good and that Harry F. Sinclair bought them up so there could be no question as to the legality of the lease he subsequently acquired on Teapot Dome.

Owen J. Roberts, Government counsel, put two officials of the general land office—L. E. Eddy and Roy Tallman—on the stand. They produced reports which had gone to Fall's office in advance of the Sinclair lease which were to the effect that all claims on Teapot Dome were entirely without merit and should be ignored. One of the reports recommended an injunction be obtained to force the "squatters" off the land.

It is the Government's contention that Sinclair bought the claims up and gave the quit-claims to the Government regardless because he didn't want to take any chances that some one would raise an issue after he had gotten his lease which would bring out the manner in which it was obtained.

DECISION HELD UP

Declaring that neither counsel had presented sufficient argument or evidence on the essential particulars of the point at issue, Justice Siddons, presiding over the Fall-Sinclair oil conspiracy trial, today withheld decision as to whether Harry F. Sinclair's testimony before a Senate committee in 1922 may be admitted into evidence.

This testimony is to the effect that during Christmas week, 1921, Sinclair and an attorney went to ex-Secretary of Interior Albert B. Fall's ranch at Three Rivers, New Mexico, for the express purpose of "seeing about the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve lease." The government, which is contending this lease was fraudulently negotiated, considers admission of Sinclair's Senate testimony as all important.

SUBPENAED?

Siddon held that admission of the testimony rested on the question of whether Sinclair had been actually subpenaed to appear before the Walsh committee, and he pointed out that neither the prosecution nor the defense had made this clear. He asked for more details.

50-FOOT FALL VICTIM TELLS OF NEGRO ATTACK

Semi-conscious and in critical condition, William Adams, 22, of 353 Oakland avenue, today mumbled from a bed in Homeopathic Hospital a story that he had been attacked by two Negroes at noon and dropped over a 50-foot cliff at the end of Moultrie street upon the railroad tracks. Adams suffered a possibly fractured skull and contusions. He was unable to ascribe a motive.

end her suffering. "I could not bear to see her suffer any longer," he said when he gave himself up.

THE judge said he was bound to tell the jury: "Had this poor child been an animal, instead of a human being, the man would have been actually liable to punishment if he had not put it out of its misery. That is the law." The jury acquitted the man.

Birth control ladies will be interested in his case. His wife was a tubercular, had four children in four years, died in the fourth childbirth. The law would have punished anybody for showing her how to avoid that.

DR. MASON, head of the University of Chicago, where this is written, says college study should be a pleasure, not a bore. "We have been cramming our students in America, stuffing them with facts, dates and thoughts in which they are not interested."

WHAT applies to education applies especially to industry. More than a hundred years ago, Charles Fourier declared that to settle humanity's troubles: "Industry must be made attractive."

When men work because they like to work, as boys play football or as scientists study, civilization will have begun.

Men work now because they must starve if they don't, and that is not much better than old slavery, under which men worked, because they were lashed if they didn't work.

MOVING pictures will make education pleasant for children, and enable them to learn in a month more than they can learn now in a year.

Higher wages, with many luxuries unknown to workers of other days, begin to make industry attractive. But it is only a beginning. The next step will be an end of horrible monotony in work, and dreadful uncertainty as to the future.

heavy black bobbed locks, indignantly denied her father's story.

BROKE LOCK, SHE SAYS

"We were not in the bedroom, but the kitchen," she said. "I broke the lock. I had been with my sister in Brookline, and on our return we found the house locked and I had to break the lock to get in. My father was drunk. Carlo had been coming to see me for a year, and my father had never objected. He made trouble this time because he was drunk, and because he was put up to it."

A policeman interjected: "Kelly told her to say this."

"He did not," retorted the girl.

The broken padlock with a twisted key was offered in evidence, and it was suggested that the girl was not strong enough to have twisted it as she said she had. Magistrate Brandon handed it to her and bade her show her strength by twisting it. She tried, but without success.

DeBast, stocky, swarthy, sullen, said he was 17 years old. He looks much older. He gave his address as 1241 Penn avenue, and his name as Carl Kelly. He made a sweeping denial of Kline's charges.

"He didn't have a thing to say about this," he said, "until the cops put him up to it."

FIRST NEW FORD

Ford and other officials of the company.

After it had become a finished product with a body, it was taken to the office of the company in Dearborn, where it was placed beside the fifteenth million Model T, which officially ended the production of the long line of ancestors of the famous flivver family.

The new Ford no more resembles the car formerly turned out by the company than a graceful porpoise resembles a whale. It is a smart-looking automobile, low and rakish, and is thoroughly up to the minute in appearance. It can make 50 miles an hour easily and 60 if pressed.

DEALERS WITHOUT CARS

Henry Ford wore a happy smile as the first new car came to the end of its production journey. It was one of the first he had displayed since May 26, last, when the production of model T ceased. In the meantime, it is estimated that he has expended many millions in rearranging the Ford plant and business and that 10,000 dealers who have been without cars in the period have lost a sum that in the aggregate runs into many millions.

Though the Ford has been off the market nearly five months, at the present time it is in third position, or better, in retail sales in the low-priced field in several cities, and the company announces it already has tentative orders for 375,000 cars.

Through rearrangement of machinery and introduction of higher speed tools the company will be able to turn out 11,000 cars or more daily, as against a maximum of 8,000 under the old scheme of production. In 300 working days it will be able to turn out more than 2,000,000 cars.

Production for the time being is necessarily limited. At present about 20 cars daily are being turned out, complete with bodies. This number will gradually be increased and in two or three weeks should mount to at least 100 cars daily. From 50,000 to 60,000 cars of the different models will be needed to supply dealers for display purposes alone.

For the present production will be confined to closed cars of the sedan type, but it is expected that quantity production will be attained before the end of the year at a rate of at least 2,000 and possibly 5,000 cars a day.

FORD REVERSES DECISION

By International News Service.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 24.—The new Ford car, in its experimental stage, has been approved by Henry Ford, but it has not been O' K.'d for production, since Ford is reserving decision on several minor parts, according to an official statement today from the Ford Motor Company.

Officials said Henry Ford was not at the new assembly plant Thursday, as stated in an article in a New York newspaper, announcing the "official turning out of the new Ford car."

He spent the entire day with C. E. Sorenson, general manager, in the Dearborn laboratories. There has been no exhibition of the new car in Dearborn or anywhere, as stated in the New York newspaper.

"It is news to me that there has been a new car placed on exhibit," Fred L. Black, advertising manager, said today. "There has been no exhibit anywhere of the new Ford."

CHURCH PLATE ROBBERY SUSPECT'S HEARING SET

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 24.—Morris Fisher, 17, Sandyville, charged with robbing collection plates of the Methodist Church at Mineral City, June 21 and October 15 will get a hearing before Judge J. N. Lamneck Tuesday. He also is accused of destroying church property.

"HE WAS GOOD TO ME"

accidental, police believe. Sobs shaking her and with tragic, haunted brown eyes she told her story brokenly. It is this:

"I was getting dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn live with us, and Joe had called them to come to the meal. He had been drinking, and just as they came in he struck me and backed me into a corner.

"I had been cutting bread and held the knife up sort of toward my face so he couldn't hit me again. I knew when he struck it and I said, 'Oh, Joe! Don't hurt yourself!' Then I saw the blood, and he sank to the floor."

DEFENDS MATE

Here she broke down and cried brokenly. Mrs. Glenn, her eyes now red from weeping with her old friend, whom she has known since childhood, broke in:

"That's all true. I saw him. He was very mean to her."

Hurriedly the widow interposed:

"Now, don't go saying mean things about poor Joe. It isn't fair, for he can't defend himself. There never was a kinder man when he wasn't drinking."

Mrs. Glenn said quietly:

"Eleanor, you must tell them the truth. You know he didn't work and that you had to support him and when he did get a day or two on an ice wagon or whitewashing he spent the money on moonshine."

Pitifully Mrs. Holby held her small hand out and turned it over. It was scarred with bruises and calouses that showed how she had labored:

"Yes, I did work hard. I did support him usually. But he couldn't help being that way. He was weak—I—loved him anyway," she faltered. "He was like a child sometimes. We were just beginning to get along well. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn came to take my attic because I needed the money and I had plenty of day work. Then this terrible thing had to happen—just when we were going to get along so well."

The Holbys had been married eight years. Mrs. Holby was born on the North Side and has lived there ever since.

The faithful Glenns are being held with the tired and broken little wife for the coroner's jury. There was no one who heard her story this morning but hope she will be given extreme mercy.

For she goes to your heart with her pitiful cry:

"I loved him. God in heaven! I wouldn't have harmed him if I had known he meant to kill me!"

TRUDY WOULD SWIM CHANNEL

the channel again. I want to try it under more favorable conditions and I will, too—wait and see! That is a secret. I haven't told anyone else."

It was an important announcement. As soon as she got it off her chest she looked down at her feet encased in comfy, well-worn pink bedroom slipers, and jumped up:

"Oh, I forgot to change my shoes. I hate shoes! All the time I put off putting them on till the last minute. Once I started out of the hotel in these old things."

She laughed and mussed her smooth straight brown hair.

"And hats! Oh, they kill me."

"What! You don't like pretty hats!"

"I wouldn't give a tinker's darn for all the gorgeous hats in the world. I wouldn't ever buy one if convention didn't demand that I punish myself with one."

"What do you like to wear?" Trudy was questioned.

Thoughtful a moment, she finally grinned:

"Nothing. I don't like clothes. They hamper me. I guess I like axle grease belt. Although I feel pretty much at home in a bathing suit, too."

Constantly in motion, her powerful shoulders heaving beneath a pretty pink and white flowered dress, the famous American girl was a picture of splendid health and vitality. One could easily imagine how she felt about the fussy furbelows of the average girl. She is hardly in the same world.

"Have you heard about the Ederle cup I am going to establish?" she asked in a businesslike interview manner. "I want to encourage swimming. I want other girls to know the joy of being fit and healthy and athletic. The water is glorious and I hate to see anyone miss it.

"So there is to be a cup. We plan to have county, state and national meets to select the champion girl swimmer of America and she will be awarded the Ederle cup."

"Trudy" laughed when asked if it had been her secret ambition all her life to swim the channel:

"Mercy, I didn't even think about it until a year before. One day at the Women's Swimming Association the instructor said he believed one of his girls could swim the channel and asked for volunteers. Nobody spoke up, so I said I would. Of course I didn't dream at the time it would ever pan out. But it did—and I'm the happiest girl in the world today."

"Trudy" expressed keen sympathy for the other women swimmers who had made the attempt to swim the channel and were doubted. She smiled and stretched her arms joyfully.

"Well, no one can say I was a fake! Maybe you think I'm not grateful to the 65 newspapermen on that tug who were eyewitnesses to my swim. I am the only officially registered one of the swimmers. Not even Mrs. Carson is an official champion."

Asked if she thought Mercedes Gleitze, London typist, really did swim the channel, she shrugged her shoulders:

"Well, it would be a shame to doubt anyone who really had. But I can't see why they don't have someone to prove all that hard work. Why the News of the World was so anxious to turn the thousand over to that woman doctor who was a fake is a mystery, too. Those kind of things should all be official. It isn't fair to the real channel swimmers to have it made to look like child's play."

"Trudy" hates traveling as badly as she hates hats and shoes. She moans:

"I want to stay in New York! Packing, packing all the time. I am so tired. But, I guess I'm in for it."

Teased about romance the girl champ refused to even blush and only shrugged:

"I don't want to be an old maid. Of course I'd like to meet a nice man and get married."

She grinned:

"Why, I wish I'd fall in love right here in Pittsburgh."

There's your chance, boys. Line forms on right.

Kidnap, Attack Girl

Victim of a brutal attack, Miss Peggy Lutz, 18, 3943 Liberty avenue, was left wandering dazedly about in a field near Stanton avenue last night by two armed Negroes who kidnaped her from her escort B. J. Huber, 20, of 5519 Walnut street.

Miss Lutz and Huber were sitting in Huber's machine in Stanton avenue, near Engine House No. 38, when one of the Negroes opened the door and, while he leveled a revolver at Huber, dragged Miss Lutz from the machine. When Huber was about to follow the other Negro appeared and threatened him with a revolver.

Later Huber ran to the field and found Miss Lutz, who told him of the brutal attack. He reported the abduction to police of the Forty-third Street Police Station after taking Miss Lutz home.

A short time later Patrolman Thomas Fleming stopped an automobile at Eighth street and Penn avenue in which five Negroes were riding. They said they were Robert Davis, 30, of 601 Walker street; Leonard Clark, 37, of Titusville; Ray Johnson, 25, and Hazel Johnson, 24, both of 446 Sachem way, and Beulah Mosley, 21, of 90 Crawford street.

They denied knowledge of the attack and Huber failed to identify them at Central Police Station, where they were held under suspicious person charges in connection with the alleged theft of the automobile they were riding in.

HUNT PROWLER IN M'KEESPORT

McKeesport police today were searching for an unidentified Negro who last night broke into the home of Leonora Krinsky, 18, at 1007 High street, McKeesport, attempted to attack her and knocked her unconscious when she resisted, but was routed by screams of children. Leonora and younger members of the family were alone in the house at the time. All were sleeping in the same room.

NEW MOTOR ON WAY TO "DAWN"

OLD ORCHARD BEACH, Me., Oct. 24.—(INS.)—A broken valve in one of the Whirlwind motors on the airplane, The Dawn, forced Mrs. Frances Wilson Grayson to turn back on the third attempt to fly to Copenhagen, Denmark.

T. Harold "Doc" Kinkade, motor expert, made this discovery upon his arrival here by train from New Jersey today.

It was only by chance that the motor did not explode and bring disaster to the flight, it was stated.

The motor was immediately dismantled and a new one will be hurried here from the Wright factory in Patterson, N. J., delaying another takeoff.

READY IN TWO DAYS

How soon the new motor can reach here was problematical, but it was expected that it would take two days.

Mrs. Grayson's words as she stepped out of her plane for the third time after having entered with the hope of not alighting until European soil had been reached clearly indicated how she felt about the ill-luck that has apparently followed this expedition. She said:

"Isn't it a rotten shame."

Mrs. Grayson's third attempt to be the first woman to span the Atlantic in a non-stop flight ended after about two hours of futile flying. Dark smears across the wings of the plane bore testimony that oil had figured in another trans-Atlantic flight failure.

A cylinder head of the left-hand Wright whirlwind motor is believed to have cracked under the strain.

STARTS OUT WELL

The Dawn, carrying Mrs. Grayson, Stultz and Bruce Goldsborough, navigator, headed gracefully to sea at 6:13 a. m. yesterday. The takeoff was beautiful, and to observers it seemed that the plane was at least on its way to Copenhagen.

At about 3 p. m., however, wireless reports from the plane to the Cape Elizabeth station told of the abandonment of the flight. A message from the plane said:

"We are on our way back to Old Orchard. Engine trouble and fog too heavy to go through with heavy load."

At this time the plane was off Sable Island, off the coast of Nova Scotia.

At 4:10 p. m. the Dawn was back from where it had started.

Mrs. Grayson explained that, at the point off Sable Island, Stultz noticed white smoke pouring from the motor, and oil was streaming along the side and wings of the plane. The fog was heavy and they then decided to turn back.

Two hundred and sixty gallons of gasoline in the tanks were dumped to lighten the load for the trip back to Old Orchard.

IN WHICH CAMERAS SHOW -:- RUTH FROM SCHOOLDAYS -:- TO GREAT ADVENTURE

UGLY DUCKLING

Certainly this dumpy young individual in 1911 gave no promise of becoming the Ruth Elder whose beauty and courage has emblazoned her name across two continents.

SWEET SIXTEEN

At 16, the transitory stage of beauty, Ruth, then a student in Anniston, Ala., high school, looked older than she does now—and not one-half so pretty.

WON'T BE LONG NOW

But here, now at 17, we find Ruth looking up. A year later she was to be known as the belle of Anniston, which may mean something or something else.

BEAUTY QUEEN

Ruth Elder in 1925, when she was chosen the most beautiful girl in Lakeland, Fla., and competed with beauties of other cities for title of "Miss America."

CONVENIENT HUBBY NO. 2

Here we have Lyle Womack, Mr. Ruth Elder, No. 2, and at present an engineer in the Panama Canal Zone. This is the encumbrance Ruth at first denied for publicity's sake.

PARIS-BOUND

So endeth the latest chapter, with Ruth en route to Paris by steamboat after her attempted New York to Paris flight proved beyond doubt she is as courageous as she is beautiful.

SEEK TO HALT SHOWING OF FIGHT FILMS

Federal law enforcement agencies attempted today to find a way to prevent the showing in Pittsburgh of motion pictures of the recent Dempsey-Tunney fight at Chicago, the showing of which was held to be legal in the Federal Court at Philadelphia.

The first exhibition of the films was given shortly after midnight today and this morning C. L. Keep, special agent of the Department of Justice in charge of this district, called United states District Attorney John D. Meyer for a conference to determine if any steps could be taken to ban further showings.

Federal statutes prohibit the interstate transportation of prize fight films, but this was overcome by making copies of the original films, which had been brought across the state lines. It is the copy of the film which is being shown here, exhibitors say.

Following the conference Attorney Meyer said an investigation would be conducted to determine whether there had been a conspiracy to violate the federal statute and to determine whether other grounds existed for confiscation of the films.

NEARLY NUDE YOUTH ARRESTED IN TREE

John Piuskonka, 17, of 5622 Herbert way, was up a tree dressed in practically nothing when police arrested him in the rear of his home early today. He told Magistrate A. D. Brandon in Morals Court he had been robbed of his clothing and tried to enter his home from a second-story window. He was held for mental examination.

LAWRENCE COUNTY BARN IS DESTROYED

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Oct. 24—Fire of unknown origin last night destroyed the barn of R. C. McConnell, north of here, with contents, causing loss of $8,500.

RUTH SNYDER

The fate of Ruth Brown Snyder and Judd Gray, "sashweight murderers" of Mrs. Snyder's husband, was in the hands of five justices of the courts of appeals at Albany today. They will pass on motions for a new trial.

Stormy Seas Nearly Block Rescue---Ruth

us up so that we were able to climb on top of the fuselage. We crawled forward and held on to the generator part of our earth inductor compass.

We now had an opportunity to look around. For the first time we realized in what an angry sea we were.

Hold on for Life

The waves were like hills and valleys and we had to hold on for dear life in order to keep from being washed off the plane. It seemed that we would rise and fall a hundred feet and each time that we slid into a trough, the next wave would break over us as if to force us to the bottom. But always the faithful American Girl would push her nose up through the waves with a defiant push that insinuated its determination to protect us from any harm in the water as well as in the air.

As we rose to the top of each swell we would catch a glimpse of the Barendrecht and we could plainly see that we were being swept away from it very fast. While we had landed only a hundred feet or so from her side it now seemed we were almost a quarter of a mile away.

The Barendrecht seemed to be standing still, and it was impossible for us to see that any effort was being made to pick us up. I noticed just after we landed that two belts had been thrown out in our direction. They were quickly washed far away from us. We wondered if the sea was too rough. And for several minutes it gave us much concern before we knew whether or not it was actually possible for them to reach us.

For a time I was very much worried because George did not have on his life suit. But when he made an attempt to break through the top of the cabin and get to his suit another wave breaking over us proved conclusively that we had no time for anything except holding on for dear life.

Plane Battered

The frightful way in which the sea smashed the American Girl about showed us what little chance we would have had for our lives if we had not sighted a steamer. It is impossible to describe with what fury and eagerness the waves sought to lick our plane to pieces.

We had had an opportunity to glide to the water, yet even with the preparations that those precious moments afforded us, we would not have been able to cling for long to the plane, and our fate would have become another of those secrets of the seas.

There would be small hope for the aviators whose plane dropped from the skies out of sight of a ship.

I think I got the next big thrill of the trip when we were attracted by the shouts of new voices to our rear. We looked back and saw a small life boat several hundred feet away manned by five seamen who tugged frantically at the oars in order to reach us.

It seemed ages before they were able to come any closer, as we would go over the top of a big wave we could look down on them seemingly 50 feet below us and in the next minute they would be high above us.

The officer standing in the bow of the boat was holding a large coil of small rope and giving commands to the men at the oars to come nearer. When the boat was within 20 feet of us he threw the rope in our direction but it fell short and he hurriedly coiled it up for another cast. After several trials the rope came high over our heads and landed between us.

Hauled Aboard

George grabbed the end and fastened it around my waist while I implored him to go first, since I had on my life suit and was afraid he might be washed off the plane any moment.

But always the gentleman, he would not consent and his request that I hold on to the plane since he was all right was more of a command. Then I was pulled off the plane by the officer of the lifeboat and towed to safety.

I looked back anxiously at George and he waved reassuringly to me.

After I was hauled aboard the lifeboat the officer had to make several attempts again in order to throw the rope to George, but he was finally able to catch it and be pulled toward us.

The captain was anxiously inquiring of us in broken English if we were the only two aboard. And after we had assumed him that we were he gave the command to his men and they started pulling at the oars to reach the Barendrecht.

The men worked frantically and I could not help but notice that each of the men had a worried, earnest expression on his face. As the little boat pitched and rolled on the waves and wallowed its way through the seas I began to realize the chance these men had taken to save us.

I do not suppose that it actually took long before we were alongside the Barendrecht but to me it seemed a year.

Men on deck above us threw down ropes and we tied them around our waists.

As the lifeboat reached the top of a high swell and we were bumped up against the side of the ship I was able to grab hold of a rope ladder which hung over the side and climb aboard.

George was pulled up very slowly and I saw that he was all right. We looked around for the dear old American Girl.

By this time it had floated almost half a mile away and we could only see it as it would ride over the top of a high wave. We met Capt. Goos and asked what could be done and if it were possible to save our plane.

He informed us that the ocean was very rough and that the Barendrecht was not equipped with booms or chain tackle for loading or unloading any heavy weight, but assured us that he would do everything possible.

Save Plane!

Capt. Goos had a kindly face and was a man whose personality would cause you to place confidence in him immediately upon meeting. I felt encouraged to know that we had a chance of saving our plane.

Capt Goos called out several commands and his men began gathering rope, block, tackle, etc. Then the Barendrecht was headed in the direction of the plane.

After we had pulled alongside two men jumped on the wing and with extreme difficulty succeded in placing heavy ropes about the struts. We could very quickly tell that it was a physical impossibility to save the plane intact, as the heavy swell would take the plane up high and dash it against the side of the ship.

While every effort was being made to pull it aboard, it was battering itself to pieces, the heavy waves had torn most of the linen from the fuselage and the wings were being ripped to shreds.

All this time I was watching, and when I realized that the plane was being wrecked I could not bear to stand and see it longer.

I preferred to remember it as it struggled and battled bravely through the storm trying to carry us to safety, rather than as a wreck, beaten and torn to pieces. I went inside the cabin while George remained on deck directing the men how and where they were to place the ropes on the fuselage so that it could be hauled aboard. I went in and lay down on a bunk in the captain's cabin.

Explodes, Burns

Some short while afterwards George came in with the captain and I anxiously inquired of him how much of the plane had been saved.

It was foolish to ask that question, as the look on George's face told me plainly that things had not gone well. Captain Goos explained to me after the ropes had been placed around the motor and they were trying to pull it out of the water a big wave dashed it against the side of the ship jamming the motor back into the gas tank and causing it to explode and set fire to the plane and to the gasoline on the water all about the ship.

The flames leaped high over the side of the Barendrecht and my beautiful American Girl soon went down out of sight.

They were forced to cast off to prevent disaster to the Barendrecht.

Capt. Goos was very apologetic at their failure to get the plane aboard, but we knew that they had done everything in their power.

It brought me to my senses when he told us that we should feel grateful for being alive and uninjured.

Of course this was the only way to look at it.

We were safe on board the Barendrecht; what remained of our wonderful plane was resting at the bottom of the sea and my dream of reaching Paris was shattered for the time being.

[In succeeding chapters Miss Elder will tell more about the flight and the disaster of the American Girl].

Ruth Sips Champagne In Madeira Islands

By Universal Service Special Cable Dispatch.

FUNCHAL, ISLANDS OF MADEIRA, Oct. 23.—Ruth Elder, pretty aviatrix, and her pilot, Capt. George Haldeman, whose plans to make a non-stop flight from New York to Paris were thwarted when their plane developed trouble at sea, spent today sightseeing.

The Lima, the boat taking them from the Azores to Spain, docked here at 7 o'clock this morning. Miss Elder and Capt. Haldeman, with United States and British consuls, motored to various mountain peak resorts this afternoon.

Miss Elder rowed on a mountain lake with a native child and drank a glass of champagne. The aviators took lunch at the home of United States Consul Lord, and re-embarked on the Lima for Lisbon late this afternoon.

Miss Elder still was asleep when the Lima docked here this morning. She left the ship at 11 o'clock to accept the American consul's invitation for a short tour of Madeira before lunch.

Reporters and photographers had gathered on the dock to greet the fliers, and to avoid them Miss Elder and Capt. Haldeman disembarked on a private yacht.

Capt. Haldeman, in a statement to Universal Service this afternoon, said: "We had a pleasant trip from the Azores. We feel partially rested."

'Dry' Padlock Threat Confronts Pullmans

By Universal Service.

CHICAGO, Oct 24.—Uncle Sam isn't going to overlook Pullmans, day coaches and lounge cars of crack transcontinental flyers in his latest padlock drive on the Chicago area, it was learned today.

In fact, the moving palaces in which passengers are alleged to imbibe liquor, may be padlocked and put out of service for a year, as the Federal forces' next move in enforcing the "observation evidence" decision of the Federal Supreme Court.

According to Alexander G. Jamie, assistant prohibition director, an investigation is already under way to determine the extent of drinking on trains.

The recent United States Supreme Court ruling, holding that the owner of a public place who permits patrons to drink liquor is subject to injunction proceedings, applies to railroad operators as well as cafe owners, said Jamie.

"If government agents find passengers drinking in any car on a train, such evidence, in my opinion, will be sufficient to warrant injunction proceedings," he added.

The inclusion of railroad trains in the dry drive here followed the receipts of information from a disgruntled railroad employe. In a letter to the prohibition department, he declared the dry law was being flagrantly violated on trains and that the employes make little or no effort to halt the drinking.

Morrow Is Given Flying Start as Diplomat

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Oct. 24.—Dwight Morrow is on his way to Mexico to become a diplomat. His diplomacy started early, in fact, at the border—when he got into an armored train. We needn't worry about him. Those Morgan boys can generally take care of themselves. If the train is held up by bandits, I bet you the outlaws come out second best in any financial transaction. If worse comes to worst he will float a loan and take their guns and horses as collateral.

WILL ROGERS.

These are anxious hours for old Amherst. Cal will stick by his classmates. It's too bad he hasn't got a war to send some of them to if Dwight gets away with Mexico in good shape. I hereby propose him as first ambassador to Russia.

Yours,
WILL.

LINDY FINISHES AIR TOUR OF 48 STATES

By JOHN W. MARTIN,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, the original New York-to-Paris flier, completed his three months air tour of the 48 states with his arrival at Mitchel Field with his Spirit of St. Louis, flying from Philadelphia, the last city he visited on his tour, which was arranged by the Daniel Guggenheim fund for the promotion of aeronautics.

A crowd of nearly 2,000 persons was waiting in the rain to greet the famous aviator. He made a perfect landing and stepped out of the plane smiling and graciously to sake hands with many of his admirers.

Since he left New York in mid July, he has flown 22,600 miles in 260 hours in the air. He visited 82 cities from coast-to-coast.

The Spirit of St. Louis, looking the worse for the long air jaunt, will be sent to the Wright Aeronautical Company plant at Paterson, N. J., for its first complete overhauling. It still is in perfect flying condition, however, its pilot said.

Col. Lindbergh will remain here a few days as the guest of Harry Guggenheim, and then will go to Michigan to visit his mother and friends, flying the Spirit of St. Louis there if the overhauling is completed in time.

He has no definite plans for his activities after visiting in Detroit, Col. Lindbergh said. He denied recent reports that he was to enter the aviation divisions of the War or Commerce Departments.

MEMORIAL SERVICE HELD FOR HARRY W. DUNLAP

Eulogizing the late Harry W. Dunlap, first teacher of the Emory Brotherhood Bible class, the Rev. Dr. W. Wofford T. Dr. Duncan reviewed the 17 years Mr. Dunlap led the class in the East End congregation and lauded his work with the men of the community.

"Wealth and fame and popularity are as nothing compared with the gathering and organizing of hundreds of men around the central figure of Jesus Christ and the molding of their hearts and minds after the pattern of Biblical ideals," Dr. Duncan said.

"Students' Trinity" Held Peril to Education

Man has not advanced intellectually in the last 10,000 years, Dr. Tapy declared, but has devoted all attention to superficial standards resulting in the present-day superficial civilization.

TO DEMAND DRY PLANKS IN ALL PLATFORMS

By Universal Service

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Positive declarations in party platforms supporting prohibition and law enforcement will be demanded by the drys in the 1928 presidential campaign, Clarence True Wilson, secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals declared here.

He indorsed the "call to the colors" adopted by 75 dry leaders at a recent prohibition conference at Atlantic City as "the most stirring and statesmanlike call issued to the patriotic people of the United States since the signing of the Armistice."

This declaration made it plain that the drys will fight the election of all office-seekers who are either negative or silent on prohibition and law enforcement. It said:

"We call upon the American people to repudiate all state and national party platforms that deal only in glittering generalities with law enforcement. We will oppose and vote against candidates in both parties whose promise is fair and dry, but whose official performance is wet."

RUTH TOO UPSET TO READ BRIEF

By Universal Service.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Ruth Snyder's brief, by which she hopes to obtain a new trial may be presented to the Appellate Court in Albany, unread by the death-house widow of Albert Snyder, for whose murder she was jointly convicted with Judd Gray, last June.

She was so upset by the proximity of a decision from the higher court she was unable to read the document.

Gives Cal Farm

LUKE DUFFEY

A bitterly satirical deed, a sermon on farm ills, was signed by Luke Duffey, Republican state senator, active in agricultural affairs, of Indiana, and 176 acres of farm land in Pulaski County, Ind., were conveyed to President Coolidge and other national leaders opposed to the McNary-Haugen surplus crop control plan. The deed states that Coolidge and the others shall suffer all the liabilities of American farm ownership. It closes by saying that, should the administration establish a real policy, then the land will revert to Indiana, to be dedicated as the Coolidge industrial park.

CORRECT BALLOT COUNT DRIVE CONSIDERED

Preparation of a circular letter instructing election officials in the counting of votes as a means of reducing the large number of errors found in recounting was being considered by the Allegheny Elections' Association today as its probe of the recent primary irregularities went into its second month.

Three more ballot boxes were scheduled to be brought in for recount today and additional petitions for others are to be presented to court. It was declared that, from present indications, hardly a district in the county has correct totals.

Members of the Pennsylvania Elections' Association are to meet here today with officials of the Allegheny County Association to discuss continuance of the investigation here and probably to obtain the local association's support in a state-wide campaign for adoption of voting machines.

BELIEVED CRAZED, MAN ATTEMPTS TO BURN JAIL

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, O., Oct. 24—Two trusties in the Belmont county jail yesterday extinguished a fire started by John Kiger, Martins Ferry, committed on a lunacy charge. Kiger ignited the casements of the window in his cell and the prompt act of the trusties probably prevented a serious fire.

Are Exclusive Friendships Desirable?

WHEN a young man and a girl are fond of each other, but not engaged, should they go about exclusively with each other? Or should they welcome new friendships without sacrificing the old?

These questions are suggested by the following charming letter: "Dear Miss Fairfax:

"A few days ago we read your article entitled, 'Generous Friendships.' We would appreciate it if you would give your viewpoint regarding another angle of the case.

"We are 20 and 19 years old, respectively. We have been going about together for a year. It was not love at first sight. When we first went out together, as we learned later, neither felt any thrills or heart-throbs. There was a mutual attraction, but that was all.

"We went about together, frequently, however, and soon found we had exactly the same thoughts on nearly every subject, and were in general congenial companions. Neither of us is easily led, and we can argue with those who do not agree with us, so we did not agree just to make a good impression.

"Neither of us has since met anyone we care for as much for as for each other. Our friendship ripened into a deep and beautiful love. We remember an article you once wrote about friendship being the foundation of true and lasting love.

"Do you advise us to cling to each other? We are completely satisfied with each other. Or shall we go out—roam about a bit—perhaps lose some of our ideals—which, by the way, are the highest in each case and identical at that.

"Both of us have had admirers, and still have. But each has remained true by rejecting these, not because we are sweethearts—we are not 'steadies'—but because neither has found another friend with the same agreeable ways and congenial ideas.

"Surely, you do not wish us to part and not care whether one goes out without the other. Please tell us ours is an unusual case, and that, having found happiness with each other, we should cling to it until the day we shall be able to marry and live in greater happiness. This cannot come to pass until about four years. Some day we intend to wed.

"We sincerely hope you will agree with us. The feminine part of this concern has a sister who married a man she had been going with for 10 years. They are still the same happy, agreeable young people they were at the start.

"Do you think we can be as happy? We wish to thank you for your comments, whether or not you agree with us.

"MARGE AND TOM."

With all my heart I congratulate you, Marge and Tom, on the fine friendship that is gladdening your lives and brightening your plans for the future. Most decidedly, I feel that you should cultivate and enjoy that friendship. There is every reason why you should continue to be happy together.

Roam about—lose your ideals? Now you know, I am sure, I would not advocte such a course.

You say you are not engaged—are not even sweethearts or "steadies," but that if all goes well you plan to wed in about four years. This seems a sensible plan.

Four years is too long for a formal engagement. To pledge yourselves to vows and restrictions of a formal betrothal, under the circumstances, would be most foolish. As it is, you are free to enjoy each other's companionship and also the friendship and companionship of others.

I hope you will keep this friendship of yours broad-minded and progressive. Let your interest and good will radiate to all the world, not center exclusively and selfishly on each other.

You cannot force yourselves to go about with third persons who do not interest you, of course—that would be absurd. But because you are so fond of each other, I am sure you will not take the attitude that other friends are dull and boring. Rule out jealousy. Try to be friendly with all worth-while girls and young men you know. If you really love each other you can trust each other.

I assure you, in this way you will lose nothing and gain much. We all need a wide circle of friends. If you two are really congenial—and I feel sure you are—you will remain first with each other, although neither is restricted to pledges. Through interesting contacts, you will gain new and absorbing ideas and viewpoints to share with each other.

Love can be very selfish and self-absorbed when two persons are entirely wrapped up in each other. Such love, although ardent at first, seldom lasts.

Enjoy the happiness of your enthusiastic young friendship, dear Marge and Tom. But encourage, also, all companionship of those who share your ideals, even though they may not agree with all your views. In this way, there is every probability that at the end of two years your mutual love, tested and proved, will enter eagerly into a betrothal which will lead, I sincerely hope, to a lifetime of married happiness and success.

On the Fence -:- By Fanny Darrell

ALL Summer long she had been leading him a race. She kept him guessing and he has been in such a state of anxiety and uncertainty until he can no longer eat nor sleep. Was she playing the coquette with him? Did she really care for him as she at times led him to believe?

But she was no coquette nor was she merely playing with him. She was "on the fence" herself and all this vacillating was due to indecision. Shall she marry him or shall she not? It is such an important step that she does not want to be too hasty. Who will help her to decide?

Ride Some Hobby for a Serene Old Age

DID you happen to see a dispatch printed in all the papers about a man who "retired" from business and returned to his old job after seventy days of "leisure"?

DR. COPELAND

"For thirty years this man had been a member of the New York Stock Exchange, sold his seat and determined to take it easy the rest of his life. But he couldn't stand idleness. He put up with it for ten weeks and then, unable to endure his new life, bought a seat on the Exchange for $30,000 more than he got for his own.

"I don't know what to do," he said to a friend who was surprised to find him around Wall Street when he was supposed to be out enjoying himself in the country.

To begin with, I would say in commenting on this case, I do not believe in retirement. It is better for everybody to stay in harness.

Unfortunately, however, it is not possible for everybody to do this. When old age approaches, the employer is likely to seek a new man. This causes sadness and even heart-breaking.

Only a little while ago I begged the employers of a man to permit him to round out an even fifty years of service. He lacked but fifteen months of that remarkable record. I'm glad to say our petition was approved. But it will be just as hard to quit at the end of fifty years as it seemed at forty-eight years and nine months.

Since the average person must retire some time he should be getting ready for it in advance. The trouble with too many men is that they have no avocation, no hobbies, no outside interests. This is a great mistake.

My idea is that the man, even if he never expects to retire, should have some diversion. He can be interested in a non-selfish way in politics, in art, in stamp collecting, in books. It makes no difference what the diversion is, so long as there is one.

But this should not take the place of golf, walking, horseback riding, or some other out-door sport. There should be this means of exercising, in addition to the diversion I have suggested.

Begin now to think about what you will do when you "quit." I was "back home" a few weeks ago. On "our" street lives a man who was a merchant in Detroit for years. He had made his plans to give up business at a certain age and go to this little town where he had purchased a modest home. He is having the time of his life with his flowers and trees and attic.

This man prepared for his retirement. He planned it as he did his business. So when he did retire he went into something he had longed to do.

The late Mr. Henry Clews told me once he made "Fourteenth street the dividing line in his life." That is, he put business aside when he crossed Fourteenth street on his way home from his office. He did not permit himself to return to thoughts of business till he crossed Fourteenth street next morning.

You can't retire unless you have something to retire to—if I may put it that way.

Your health and happiness and long life depend upon how you spend your active days and also upon how you have prepared the way for retirement.

For the Lovelorn

By ELEANOR GALE

An American Beauty

DEAR MISS GALE:

Am a girl of 20 years of age and a winner of a recent beauty contest. I have oodles of admirers, but they are all alike when it comes to petting. In plain English, I am completely disgusted with them all. Until just recently I had been going steady with a fellow whom I thought was a gentleman, but one night he offended me, and roughly speaking, I gave him the gate. Now what I want to know Miss Gale is, should I take this fellow back since he has apologized and is very, very sorry? I have a deep liking for him and he did not kill that feeling although I was terribly angry and slapped his face. Of all the fellows I have gone with he is the only one I have any feeling for at all. Will you, Miss Gale, and some of your male and female readers please try to solve my problem? I will follow your advice closely and thank you in advance.

AN AMERICAN BEAUTY.

Don't be too willing to take him back, my dear. He deserves punishment for his actions. However, if you are sure he is sincerely sorry and means to act differently, it would be all right to forgive him in time.

A Blonde

DEAR MISS GALE:

I am 15 years old and I like a certain boy who is two years my senior and is supposed to like me. I don't want to lose him and I was falling away from him when I learned he loved another girl. I must have become jealous because I found myself crying about him. I don't go out with boys because I am too young. But, oh, I love this boy, and, Miss Gale, please tell me what to do.

A BLONDE.

It is only human to find yourself interested in the boy after you discover he likes someone else, my dear. There is nothing you can do, if his interest lies elsewhere. Try to forget him. You are far too young to be thinking about such things as love.

Another Blue Eyes

DEAR MISS GALE:

I am a girl in my early teens and I crave a good time. By this I mean that I like to go out with a nice type of young men and a nice set of young girls. My parents do not believe in this in the least, and they are very strict with me, at all times. I am working at home, but would rather be away from home, as I am not at all content or happy. I have had a notion to leave home several times, but have not left yet. Do you think I should? If you do not, please give me some good advice. Another thing is this: I have had several respectable married men ask me for dates, which I did not give them. Do you think I should give the married or the single set any dates on the sly. I am a good looking girl, and a number of men want to take me out, and I need some good advice, so I thought it best to write to you.

ANOTHER BLUE EYES.

If you are seriously considering leaving your home or going out with married men, I quite agree with you that you need good advice. Your parents' strictness is probably the best influence in life that you could possibly have. As for going out with men "on the sly," and most particularly married men, that is out of the question. You surely know better than to let a married man pay attention to you, my dear. There is no surer way of losing your reputation.

PATRICIA PITT'S SPRIGHTLY COMMENT ON PITTSBURGH SOCIETY HAPPENINGS

Gay Social Season to Be Made Even More Scintillating by Two Dances of Pittsburgh Club

WHAT a gay season Pittsburgh society is to have this winter! So many debutante affairs, so many school dance events and so many affairs to be held by the dignified married set! The season is really going to be scintillating.

And now comes the announcement that, added to all the events which are fairly crowding the social calendar, two dances will be given at the Pittsburgh Club this year. These dances are an innovation. The date for the first affair is December 9, and for the second, January 6. And these balls, we hear, are to be quite exclusive. The committee in charge comprises such prominent men in the social set as George M. Laughlin, Jr., William Christopher Robinson, William Penn Snyder, Jr., and McCleane Brown.

These two balls will be known as Friday night dances. Probably they will become traditional society affairs of the city.

What's Chicago's loss is Pittsburgh's gain, for the Walter Cockrill Carrolls are going to bring out their interesting young daughter, Florence, in Pittsburgh, after all. This change in plans resulted from the Carrolls returning to this city to live after having taken a prominent part in Chicago's social life for six years. And Florence's debut, to be made at a tea the Carrolls will give in their home in College avenue the afternoon of November 1, will be most interesting for everyone. For she will meet among the debutantes of this season and her other guests, many of the girls she attended children's parties with when she was a very little girl in Pittsburgh.

Mary Edith Carroll, another daughter of the Carrolls, who made her debut just recently in Chicago, will help receive the guests. The Carrolls third daughter, Mrs. Edward Standish Bradford, Jr., formerly of Pittsburgh, and now of Long Meadows, Mass., will not be able to be present in Pittsburgh for her sister's debut, Mrs. Carroll fears.

Because their plans have been changed so quickly, Mrs. Carroll has not yet named definite dates for subsequent affairs for her debutante daughter. There will be an entertainment, though, she believes, while the Princeton Triangle Club is in the city. As you know, this club will give its usual play at the Syria Mosque on December 23, an affair always sponsored and attended by society.

Florence, whom so many of the Pittsburgh younger set knew in her sub-deb days, chose Westover as her finishing school.

And now another debut date has been changed. Janet, the daughter of the William C. McKinneys of Forbes street, will make her debut on November 29 instead of November 8, because of the illness of Mrs. McKinney. Janet, as you know, will make her bow at a tea to be given in the Twentieth Century Club by Mrs. McKinney. Among the entertainments planned for the McKinneys' debutante daughter, all to be late season events, will be an affair to be given by Mrs. William Edward McKinney of Inverness street, Janet's sister-in-law.

"HOUSE OF MY DREAMS" DISCUSSED AT MEETING

At the opening meeting of the Woman's Club of Mt. Lebanon, Mrs. James S. Huey, the president, talked of a new club house as one of the day-dreams of the organization. At today's meeting in Lebanon Hall Mrs. M. M. Redenbaugh extended this thought to individual homes by speaking on "The House of My Dreams." Mrs. Redenbaugh treated her subject in a practical way, bringing out many happy suggestions. She gave the history of interior decoration, and said: "A few years ago our houses were correct and harmonious in appearance, but uninspiring and depressing. But we as a nation are now becoming more color-conscious and are therefore more responsive to the artistic progress of the times." Mrs. Charles Mitsheien was chairman for the day. The music was in charge of Mrs. Lucille Miller Werner and Mrs. I. S. Shaffer was one of the soloists. Tea was served.

Circus Films Latest Hollywood Vogue as Many Stars Appear in Dramas of Tanbark and Big Tops

By DOROTHY HERZOG

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 24.—Mary Astor met with an amusing experience the other day. A local laboratory telephoned her. The voice on the other end threatened to bring suit against her if she didn't pay $3, said to be due for a screen test made some time ago. Mary knew nothing at all about the matter.

Investigation on the part of the laboratory revealed a slight error. The customer wanted was Marie Astaire—it was said—not Mary Astor.

Speaking of Mary Astor, she is busy in "Sailors' Wives," with Lloyd Hughes, the hero, and Robert Schable and Earle Fox. Upon the completion of this Warner-Fabian yarn, Mary and Hughes will play together in a circus film called "Do It Again."

Circus atmosphere is the latest co-operative background used by producers. Take a look at the list of new big top pictures, either finished or in the making. Charlie Chaplin's "The Clown;" Al Christie's special, "Tillie's Punctured Romance;" Ken Maynard's new one, the title of which we forget; Hoot Gibson's "Hi Rube;" Jacqueline Logan's "The Leopard Woman;" Chester Conklin's and W. C. Field', "Two Flaming Youths." Quite a list, and the odds are we've missed a couple.

Harry Langdon has a propman in his troupe who believes economy should be a reality, and not a conference. So he itemizes the day's expenses, and hands the list over to the boss. On one of these lists an item reads: "One box of matches, 5 cents a box—10 cents." If that propman isn't careful he'll be a supervisor soon.

Harry, by the way, is busy at work on his new funster, "The Chaser." He was shooting some golf stuff yesterday on the Lakeside Golf Club course. And there was a camera, too.

Julia Faye wound up her share of work in Phyllis Haver's new production, "Chicago," and is preparing to entrain for Manhattan with her mother, Mrs. Covell. She has booked reservations aboard the Italian liner Roma, sailing around November 6. Julia remains in New York long enough to make personal appearances with "The King of Kings" and "The Main Event," due at the Capitol shortly. While on the other side she will visit Italy, Germany and France, making personal appearances in Berlin and London when "The King" is shown in those cities.

"Chicago," incidentally, is said to be quite a picture. Unless present plans are changed, it is to be roadshowed, opening in Manhattan and other large cities on the two-a-day showing.

Jack Dempsey created quite a stir when he strolled into the Montmartre with his wife, Estelle Taylor, Norma Shearer, Minna Wallace and Mr. Stanton, his nephew from Salt Lake City.

It Lives! It Breathes!

DOROTHY SEBASTIAN doesn't want to be spoofed about that dog she has—for it is a dog. The donor said it was a Persian tea hound, or some other classy breed, and was never, under any circumstances, to be used as a dish-mop or window brush.

FOOTBALL SQUADS TO SEE GAME FILM IN DAVIS

The invitation of the Davis, extended to the football squads of Pitt and Tech, has been accepted for tonight's performance. They will occupy opposite boxes. The theater has been especially decorated. There will be more than 100 men in both squads.

One of the main features, in addition to the regular Keith-Albee vaudeville bill and feature picture, will be the screening of the official motion pictures of the Pitt-Tech game. A print of the film later will be presented to both Carnegie Tech and Pitt.

STAR EDUCATED IN CONVENT

From convent to screen stardom is the gamut of the career of Marion Davies, famous Cosmopolitan star, whose picture, "The Fair Co-ed," is in the Penn this week. Miss Davies was born in New York and she was educated in Sacred Heart Convent, Hastings, N. Y. Her father was a municipal judge. The child's histrionic ability and clever dancing attracted attention, with the result that at an early age she made an appearance in "Chin Chin."

"The Constant Nymph," dramatized from the book by the same name, by Margaret Kennedy, will be seen in the Nixon tonight, with Beatrix Thomson and Claude Rains taking the lead. The play ran the greater part of last season in New York and it has a record of almost a year in London.

Laura Hope Crews begins her engagement in Sidney Howard's dramatic comedy, "The Silver Cord," in the Pitt tonight. Melvyn Douglas, Pamela Simpson, Vera Allen, Jack Livesey and Hazel Stone are important members of the cast. Matinees Thursday and Saturday will prevail in the Pitt during the season.

"My Maryland" will be presented tonight in the Alvin. The opening is sponsored by the Pennsylvania College for Women whose committee has had a heavy demand for seats. There will be matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

The bill in the Davis features Healy and Cross, in songs; Ewing Eaton, from musical comedy; marionettes, presented by Julius Schichtl, and others. "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" is on the screen.

The Watson sister, singing comediennes, head the bill of vaudeville in Loew's Aldine this week. Their present skit is said to be funnier than anything they have done before on the stage.

Burr McIntosh, who plays an important role in "Breakfast at Sunrise" in the Grand this week is a writer, a lecturer on philosophical subjects, a war correspondent and a photographer.

The Vitaphone program in the Olympic features George Jessel in a comedy skit, "A Few Minutes With George Jessel." On the screen is "The Woman on Trial," with Pola Negri and Einar Hanson starring.

The San Carlo Grand Opera Company will come to the Pitt next Monday. Seats will go on sale in the Pitt box office Thursday. In the meantime they way be ordered from May Beegle in the Union Trust Building.

E. H. Sothern will appear in the Nixon Monday evening, October 31, and for the balance of the week, in the Irish satirical comedy, "General John Regan." Mr. Sothern will take the part of Dr. O'Grady.

A. O. H. TO HOLD ANNUAL RECEPTION TUESDAY

Irish and American dancing for the young folks, and euchre and "500" for their elders will feature the program Tuesday night of the annual reception of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in Webster Hall. County President James M. Kelly is chairman of the reception committee.

Bankruptcy Fate Of Two Film Actresses

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 24.—All isn't gold and fame in Hollywood. For the one girl that goes to Hollywood and makes good, there are hundreds of failures.

This week two very well-known actresses filed petitions in bankruptcy, due to the irregularity of the pay check. They are Virginia Brown Faire and Helen Lee Worthing.

Another girl was arrested, accused of a scheme to defraud. She had arrived in California some time ago, with small funds but great dreams of a picture career. But the picture career didn't materialize.

Alice Brady,
Charming
American Actress, writes:
"My work on the stage may appear easy to an audience but, as a matter of fact, it is very strenuous. Now and then I indulge in a cigarette for relaxation and pleasure. I use Lucky Strikes, as I find they not only protect my voice but afford me the greatest amount of genuine enjoyment."
Alice Brady.

Smooth, mellow, fragrant
And 11,105* doctors say Lucky Strikes prevent throat irritation

WHAT is the quality that Antonio Scotti, Rosa Raisa, Lawrence Tibbett, Leon Rothier, Florence Macbeth, Holbrook Blinn, Alice Brady, and other famous singers, actors, broadcasters and public speakers have found that makes LUCKY STRIKES delightful and of no possible injury to their voices?

For the answer we turned to medical men and asked them this question:

Do you think from your experience with LUCKY STRIKE cigarettes that they are less irritating to sensitive or tender throats than other cigarettes, whatever the reason?

11,105* doctors answered this question "Yes."

Consider what these figures mean; consider that they represent the opinion and experience of doctors, those whose business it is to know.

"It's toasted"
No Throat Irritation-No Cough.

* We hereby certify that we have examined 11,105 signed cards confirming the above statement.

An Apology to the Thousands Who Waited in Vain

WHEN WE ADVERTISED THE TREMENDOUS VALUES IN CONNECTION WITH OUR GREAT DOLLAR ($1.00) SALE we stated that we would sell three $1.00 cars on Sunday to the first three people who sat behind the steering wheels of those cars when the doors opened at one o'clock Sunday.

We did not know at that time that a State Law prohibits the holding of such a sale on Sunday. As a consequence, the authorities forbade our selling these stupendous values on Sunday.

We have always prided our reputation of keeping faith with the public and doing what we promised for them. We are sorry this had to happen and we wish to offer them a humble apology.

In a small way of retribution, we are going to endeavor to make Monday and the rest of this week the greatest used car sale era that Pittsburgh has ever known.

WE WILL POSITIVELY SELL SIX CARS FOR ONE DOLLAR EACH ON MONDAY. NEW GREATER VALUES THAN BEFORE WILL PREVAIL DURING THE REST OF THE WEEK.

TODAY AT ONE O'CLOCK OUR USED CAR DEPARTMENT WILL OPEN AND CARS NUMBERED 940, 810, 763 will be sold to the first persons who sit behind the steering wheels of those cars when the doors open.

AGAIN AT 8 IN THE EVENING THREE CARS WILL GO FOR ONE DOLLAR. These will be numbered 913, 805, 754 and will be sold to the first persons who sit behind the wheel when the doors reopen at 8 o'clock. The used car department will be closed from 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock.

We are sorry to have disappointed you but assure you that the values which will prevail the remainder of this week will amaze and interest you. Today at One O'Clock—Today at Eight O'Clock.

Whereas A Girl Risks Her All To Get A Rich Society Husband

IT NEVER PAYS

by Gilbert Rogers

Dan Shevlin Writes a Note And Margie Signs Her Name—and Regrets

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

MARGIE MARSH comes to New York with a thousand dollars and a wonderful education; she learns stenography, keeps house with four other girls and after three years of struggle decides to get married. But first she has to pick out the man. She thinks of Rob Saunders. Then she meets Dan Shevlin, supposed to have plenty of money and who has the air of a man of the world. She leads Rob on and he asks her to go to dinner with him. Rob believes every wife should do her own work. Margie has no further use for him. Her roommates discuss buying a beauty shop for $2,000. Margie thinks she sees a way to financial independence if she can raise the money. Shevlin takes her to lunch and asks why she doesn't marry a rich man. He offers to stake her and Margie says "all right."

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"I'll agree," he said crisply. "Why? Because it interests me—it touches my sense of humor. And it isn't difficult . . . Newport. I can get you there. Not I myself. But I have a friend. . ." He looked towards her, smiling a little. "All the clothes you need, everything you need, and on the day you win, you give me back what it costs me, and as much again . . . Is it a bargain?"

Mild amusements lurking in his eyes as if he were playing a game with a child, yet down deep in him, she could see he meant what he said.

Now that he had agreed, she felt she had been talking wildly, crazily. But pride would not let her show him that. She must get away and think, think hard . . .

He was tearing a blank sheet of paper from a notebook and pushing it and a fountain pen towards her.

"Just write what I dictate," he said pleasantly. The pen scratched, the even toneless voice went on:

"Dearest Dan:

"I am writing this to say good-by. I love you deeply, and shall never regret the six months we have spent together. But now that I am getting married, I can't see you any more. Please never breathe to anyone what we've been to each other. But I will love you all my life."

Dan Shevlin lit another cigaret, watched the smoke fade. "Have you signed that?" he asked. "Now give it to me."

"I won't." A swift sense of fear ran through Margie. She understood that note, and its value very clearly. A weapon over her head, a weapon to force her, push her, destroy her in the dim, incredible future.

"Just as you like," he murmured. "Of course, you can't expect me to advance you the money without some security."

"But I'll give you my word . . ."

"And I'll give you mine. On the day you pay me back I'll put the letter into your hands and tell you to burn it."

"But suppose I didn't marry a rich man. Suppose—suppose I married someone else—some day."

"I thought you wanted to marry a rich man."

"I do, but—"

"But you want to fall in love with him also. Well, that won't be so hard. And I've no objections to your falling in love."

"Oh, this is absolutely mad!" said Margie suddenly and vehemently.

"Of course it is. You want everything—money, pleasure, excitement, love. And you can't have them because you're fundamentally good. You've just been playing with the idea of all the things you could get with your looks—if you had the pluck."

"All right!" said Margie once more. "I'll show you. I'll show you. Here!" The letter was pushed into his fingers. He folded it, tucked it into his bill-fold, grinned at her.

"Tomorrow night we'll have a little conference. I'll turn you over to a friend of mine—Mrs. Brooke." He named an address. "That's her apartment. You'll find me there about 8 o'clock tomorrow night."

People were passing the cafeteria windows, men going home, girls in twos and threes. Was anything half so exciting happening to any of them?

When she was outside, moving homewards, too, her head ached. She felt as if she had been dreaming. He had spoken of Newport, of everything she wanted to buy, casually, as one talks of the weather. Did he know what that would mean to her? Had this thing all sprung from a few moments' conversation, a wild suggestion flung out, caught up, seriously considered. Had he—had he been laughing at her, leading her on, making game of her?

She went up the apartment stairs almost somberly. How her head whirled! How pleasant it was to see the familiar, terribly real faces of her friends once more. What utter, utter nonsense she had been planning this afternoon. But like a ghost, like a perfume, there hovered the thought that it was not nonsense, that it was cold, stark fact.

Florence Clark greeted her rapturously, told her news in a breath. Ruth Irving's serious beau had come to the rescue, bought out Madame Andree's beauty shop, installed Ruth there along with the Grahams as partners—and wasn't everything wonderful?

Margie felt glad and relieved. But she did not tell her own news. She hugged it silently, thinking, thinking. Perhaps there was no such person as Mrs. Brooke. Why had she given him that letter? She was really insane to do a thing like that. Just because your mother had sung in opera and had temperament was no excuse.

Well, she would go around tomorrow night, and—tell Dan Shevlin first. Tell him with a little, ironic laugh that she had merely been pretending, trying to see if he were willing to take his own theories seriously. Then she would ask for her letter back, say something cool and clever, and go away.

But she did not feel so confident the next evening. She did not even feel sure of what she wanted to say as she walked up to the big, white apartment with the awning before it.

The porter who looked like an admiral seemed to be expecting her, sent her up in a silent elevator, and she rang a little tremulously at the bell.

Then she found herself in the most handsome home in her life, a hallway with lamps of brilliant stones, shedding a soft glow upon old tapestries, and great, dark pieces of polished furniture. And a butler ushered her into a high-ceilinged room that was full of beautiful, softly harmonized things. A man in evening dress rose—Dan Shevlin. Looking up at her was a woman in black and gold with little gold slippers and wonderfully waved hair.

And all at once Margie's resolution left her. Luxury—like this—it might be hers, if she only dared! Life was full of people who did strange things, and all one needed was courage. She stood uncertainly, tugged two ways at once, her heart beating between longing and fear.

CHAPTER VI.

AGAIN Margie's eyes swept over the handsome room. Beautiful things there, costly things, as if all over the world men had worked to contribute one bit of loveliness. Men had gone through the forests for that piece of polished teak, had toiled over Eastern looms for the dyes of that great rug. . . .

Margie caught her breath a little. She saw Shevlin facing her, smiling, immaculate in evening white and black. She saw Mrs. Brooke staring at her, an indefinable something in her eyes.

For a moment it was as if everything were arrested, caught like a picture and held for eternity.

And Margie felt weak suddenly even frightened.

"What a fool I am!" she kept saying to herself. "Just because of money—luxuries—I'm scared. Why—why they're no different! There are things I can do that they can't! And that woman who's looking at me—pretending to smile—and hating me—I'm much younger. I wouldn't change places!"

And her voice said—was that calm, poised little voice really hers?—"How do you do? Am I too early?"

She sank into the big wing chair, enveloped in its softness and hugeness, yet not daring to be comfortable. She would sit down, wait a little, collect her breath, go away. Of course, the whole thing had been mad, idiotic, from the first. To go out deliberately, millionaire-hunting, with somebody else's money to

Election Surprising, Choice Popular And Wilson Gets Into Action at Once. His Notable Inauguration

In a liberal installment of "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson" in the Sunday Sun-Telegraph yesterday, Biographer Baker took the reader with Wilson on his first journey to Europe. There the professor, though in quest of health, made good use of his time and opportunities in studying the universities, the peoples and their customs. He made acquaintances that developed into lifelong friendships. His letters home were delightfully and impressively self-revealing. At this time also he engaged more industriously in writing history.

Wilson the University Head

WOODROW WILSON was elected to the presidency of Princeton University on June 9, 1902. It came "like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky." No one in the college community had any inkling of it in advance.

It was during the annual commencement celebration, the height of the college year, and the campus was thronged with alumni. Whisperings of a crisis in university affairs had brought together an unusually large attendance of the board of trustees for the annual meeting. Grover Cleveland, then a new trustee, a figure of distinction and solidity, was in attendance for the first time.

President Patton rose to speak. A brilliant man with a ready wit, his remarks on that day were "plain and forcible." He presented his resignation—he had served fourteen years, he wished now to retire—and he suggested Woodrow Wilson as his successor. John A. Stewart, senior member of the board, promptly nominated Wilson and asked for his immediate election.

It was in every way an astonishing procedure. While there had been informal discussion on the part of a few of the trustees, led by David B. Jones, there had been no general consultation whatever, no suggestion of any other name, no consideration of the fact that they were breaking a tradition as ancient as the university itself that its president should be an ordained minister. But they all knew Wilson; and when the vote was put it carried unanimously. The result seems to have surprised the trustees themselves.

Immediately a committee was appointed consisting of President Patton and the three trustees who were Wilson's devoted classmates of '79—Dodge, McCormick and Cuyler—to notify the new president. They found him at his home and brought him triumphantly back with them to receive the felicitations of the board. He had been taken completely by surprise, but he accepted the presidency in the same spirit of spontaneity in which it was offered.

A Popular Choice

The news spread like wildfire. A group of alumni and students escorted the new president to the steps of Old Nassau, where he was vociferously cheered and called upon to speak. On the following day, at the crowded alumni luncheon, he was formally introduced by Dr. Patton—an occasion of unprecedented enthusiasm.

"How can a man who loves this place as I love it realize of a sudden that he now has the liberty to devote every power that is in him to its service?" Mr. Wilson said at that time.

The reaction in the outside world was scarcely less remarkable. New York and Philadelphia newspapers were full of the events connected with the sudden overturn, conjectures as to the reasons for it and comments on the choice of a layman for the chair of such famous divines as John Witherspoon, Jonathan Edwards and James McCosh. The chorus of praise for the new choice was unmarred by a single discordant note.

"The new president is a man of distinction," said an editorial in "The New York Times." "His political writings have made him already well known to the country as a man capable of clear, straightforward thinking upon the problems of government, while his career as an educator testifies to his aptness for the new responsibility. The duty of the college graduate to take part in public affairs is a trite theme of the orator and the essayist. President Wilson's influence upon the undergraduate body at Princeton should be in a high degree favorable to the working out of that ideal. Under his direction a new life, higher fame and a greater usefulness to the youth of the nation and to the nation itself await the university."

Behind the rejoicing lay deep the feeling among those who knew and loved Princeton that the institution had been making no progress under the leadership of President Patton, and that, with Wilson in command, it would at once take on new life. When new plans were made, like those for a Graduate School, in 1896, years drifted by with nothing done. It was difficult to attract strong men to the university, or, having them there, to keep them. Wilson himself, tempted by glittering offers, had more than once been at the point of leaving.

Into Action at Once

Wilson responded to the new opportunity as president of Princeton University with all the ardor and intensity of his nature. It was, at length, an opportunity to act, to lead, to construct. Seventeen years he had been in a "talking profession." "Secondary successes!" He was now to step out into a new field of men and affairs.

He could scarcely wait to begin the new work. Although at the end of an exhausting college year, with a huge pile of the book proofs of his "History of the American People" upon his desk, he began at once to work upon his inaugural address. It was not to be delivered until October, but he must "clear his mind," "write his creed."

Mrs. Wilson had gone to visit her old friends, the Tedcastles in Boston, and he sat in his quiet study at Princeton—as quiet as only a professor's study in mid-vacation can be—and forged his educational thunderbolts.

He wrote to his wife on July 19:

"Fortunately, I never worked out the argument on liberal studies, which is the theme of my inaugural, before, never before having treated myself as a professional 'educator,' and so the matter is not stale, but fresh and interesting. I am quite straightening out my ideas!—and that amuses me. I feel like a new prime minister getting ready to address his constituents. I trust I shall seem less like a philosophical dreamer than Mr. Balfour does."

Here speaks the true Wilson. He is content, for he feels like a prime minister! After so many hard, dry years he can quaff at length the cup of joyful fulfillment.

His service as president of Princeton began on August 1, and the very next day, having cleared his desk of all the accumulated letters of congratulation, the proofs of his book and his inaugural address, he rushes away to Boston to the Tedcastles for a vacation.

". . . that was the first use I made of my privileges," he wrote to his loyal friend, David B. Jones. "Such is the force of precedent with men of our race."

It was one of the happiest and gayest vacations of his entire life. He keeps the Tedcastles and all their friends in a "storm of laughter and merriment." He visits with his old friend Dabney in Boston, and has long and delightful talks with him. Afterwards he spends a week or so of care-free vacation with the Hibbens and Westcotts in New Hampshire. He enjoys intensely a fishing trip on the ocean.

Fishing, No Catch

"Yesterday we put on old clothes (I put on a suit of Morgan's!) and went out some six or seven miles to fish for cod," he writes to his wife. "The party consisted of Morgan, Harry Osborn, Pyne, Hutton and myself. I caught nothing, but the sail and the fine air of the open sea were delightful—the party most congenial and interesting. We had a jolly, boyish time, took a picnic lunch on the boat, and did not get back until a little after 4 o'clock."

September 1 sees Wilson back in Princeton ardently taking up his new work. Crowded and exciting weeks! The university is at its opening and he is the new president. He must prepare his first report to the trustees; he must consider the practical aspects of the reforms he is to set forth in his inaugural

Great and beautiful days! On October 25 came the inaugural celebration for the new president—the "most dignified and impressive of its kind ever presented." Three days later Wilson's "History of the American People" was published, with broadsides of approval based upon its serial appearance. Surely it was a time of crowding honors, the evidences of successful achievement.

It was a resplendent procession that filed slowly through the noble arches of the university library on Saturday morning, October 25. Never, perhaps, in America had there been a more distinguished gathering of celebrities for a college ceremonial. The greatest educators were there, the most celebrated authors, distinguished statesmen, notable figures in the world of industry and finance. At the head of the procession marched, in academic cap and gown, the dignified figure of Grover Cleveland side by side with Gov. Murphy of New Jersey.

Woodrow Wilson, "slim, erect, keen-faced," came next with the Chancellor of the state, and then the former president, Dr. Patton, accompanied by Dr. Henry van Dyke.

More than a hundred colleges and universities were represented in the stately procession, capped and gowned in academic dignity—those in the scarlet of Oxford University the most radiant of all. A number of women presidents and deans added a touch of the unusual and a much noted figure was the Negro leader, Booker T. Washington, of Tuskegee Institute. Hadley of Yale, Butler of Columbia, Harper of Chicago, Remsen of Johns Hopkins, Prof. Lowell, representing Harvard—they were all there.

A Notable Inauguration

Marching behind the academic notables was a group of "men whose names were on every tongue." One easily singled out the portly figure of Thomas B. Reed, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, and J. Pierpont Morgan, who had come, much heralded, in a special train from New York. Mark Twain's erect form and snowy mane were conspicuous, and the art of letters was further represented by Edmund Clarence Stedman, William Dean Howells and Richard Watson Gilder. Robert T. Lincoln was a distinguished name, and several of the men who were afterwards to play such a part in Wilson's career were there, among them George Harvey and Walter H. Page. Only an accident prevented the attendance of Theodore Roosevelt, then President of the United States.

Wilson's address made a profound impression. "Through every sentence of it the honest man spoke forth." It was not, possibly, as powerful and original an outpouring as that delivered during the Sesquicentennial celebration, six years before. It was great enough! It contained the educational creed of the new leader. It sounded the keynote of his educational policy. All the thinking of a dozen years was in it. Its central ideal was expressed in its title; the university must serve the state.

"In planning for Princeton . . . we are planning for the country. The service of institutions of learning is not private, but public. It is plain what the nation needs as its affairs grow more and more complex and its interests begin to touch the ends of the earth. It needs efficient and enlightened men. The universities of the country must take part in supplying them.

"In order to serve the state it must have unity of purpose, must 'deal with the spirits of men, not with their fortunes.'"

Tomorrow's chapter will tell of the energy and ambition which Wilson's leadership immediately caused among the faculty and students at Princeton, and of his boldness in undertaking to build up the university to an extent not thought of before that time.

GEN. DICKMAN, SAN MIHIEL HERO, DIES

By Universal Service

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Lieut. Gen. Joseph Theodore Dickman, hero of San Mihiel and one of the three Americans to command an army in the World War died at his home here yesterday.

On Tuesday he is to be laid to rest in Arlington National Cemetery. The ceremony is to be marked with the seldom seen honors accorded the rank of a second highest officer of the line. All troops in the District are to be turned out, the body is to be borne on a caisson. His favorite charger, cloaked in black, is to be led behind. His service boots, empty and symbolical of the riderless horse, are to dangle from the stirrups.

The death of Gen. Dickman closes one of the most colorful careers in the United States Army. He soldiered actively for 45 years and until the outbreak of the World War had been known best as the outstanding cavalry officer in the service.

He was born in Dayton, O., in 1857 and graduated from the United States Military Academy at West Point in 1881. He was assigned to the cavalry. He took part in the Philippines campaigns of 1900 and 1902. He was called from the Philippines to become chief of staff of the fragment of American forces which took part in the celebrated Boxer rebellion. He was one of the first Americans over the Chinese wall.

From activity in the Orient Gen. Dickman returned to the United States and took command of a cavalry regiment at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont. He was called from his post and somewhat obscure rank of colonel at the outbreak of the World War to command Camp Greene, S. C. He trained a division and embarked with it on March 4, 1918.

He received his baptism of fire almost immediately. He led his division with distinction into the Chateau Thiery, Champaigne and Meuse offensives. So well he acted and handled his troops that the combined Allied General Staff, including Gen. Pershing, selected him to take the Fourth Army Corps into the Argonne. Again he demonstrated marked military ability and a genius for striking rapidly and surely. He was called from the command of the Fourth Army Corps to take the command of what was known as the Third United States Army, the mightiest and best equipped fighting force in American history. With this army he is credited with breaking the San Migiel salient. His army occupied the center.

He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, Legion of Honor, Croix de Guerre with two palms, Order of Bath, Order of Leopold and the Order of the Crown.

VETS REPUDIATE M'GOVERN

A report that Charles C. McGovern, Independent candidate for County Commissioner, has been indorsed by the United Spanish War Veterans was vigorously denied in a statement issued today in behalf of that organization by Charles C. Campbell and D. O. Ihmson, past commanders.

Their statement declared a canvass of the membership has revealed that not more than 25 members are supporting McGovern.

The choice of the organization, according to the statement, "seems to be in favor of the present board of County Commissioners, Joseph G. Armstrong and E. V. Babcock, Republicans, and James Houlahen, Democrat, due to the fact that they have employed directly under them more than 230 of our comrades of the Spanish and World wars, while McGovern, who has made many changes in the personnel of his payroll in the controller's office during the last 18 months he has been in office, has not placed one Spanish War veteran with the exception of his acting deputy controller."

"Political ballyhoo" is the term applied in the statement to McGovern's recent charge that $100,000 was offered him to withdraw. "We do not believe the story, but we do believe that it was his duty as a private detective or police officer to arrest at that time the alleged briber, if such a briber ever existed," said the statement.

Whereas A Girl Risks Her All To Get A Rich Society Husband

IT NEVER PAYS

by Gilbert Rogers

Dan Shevlin Writes a Note And Margie Signs Her Name—and Regrets

help her, somebody else knowing all about it. As if she didn't have her pride!

But Shevlin was smiling. Smiling in his dry way, his luminous eyes resting on nothing, yet missing nothing.

"Your protege, Carlotta. Think she'll do? Why shouldn't the thing work? Why the blazes shouldn't we go into this wholesale—increase our profits—a little private matrimonial agency. What?"

Mrs. Brooke's glance—it had swerved sideways. Crisply, clearly, she spoke, but in a staccato French. The intention must have been to insult, to ignore, to put Sally in her place.

Almost Margie breathed a prayer of thankfulness. It was worth growing up in France, being taught in a school outside of Paris, being lonely and a stranger—just for this moment.

Her accent, free from any flaw, as easy as English, interrupted:

"Pardon me, Madame. In case you wish to say anything privately to Mr. Shevlin, I think it would be wiser of you not to speak in French."

Their eyes met like the swords of duelists. Mrs. Brooke's face, hostile beneath its polite bland air, Mrs. Brooke's face expressing perplexity, a little chagrin.

"Well, I'll be—where did you learn French—that kind of French?" Shevlin admitted his humorous amazement.

He was honest at least. Bad all through, but not pretending to be good. That was how and why you could like anyone who was bad, who was hard. After all you could talk to Dan Shevlin. Pretenses?—he didn't know what the word meant. Margie could imagine girls falling in love with him, all sorts of girls, all sorts except hers.

"This thing will be simple, Charley. D'ye see? She talks French—the real French—not that finishing school affair of yours. Good Lord, even I can tell the difference. She has nothing to do except fold her hands and look foreign. She's an exotic—a demure exotic. We're going to have some fun."

"When people find out—do you think it will be so much fun [illegible]?"

Mrs. Brooke was ignoring her, snubbing her in little quiet, significant ways. Her eyes looked cold, unhappy even. Her short, straight hair cut short as a boy's, her slim body in its black and gold, her little feet stretched out before her in their little gold slippers—well, she might be picturesque, but she was 35, 35! Margie said that hard to herself, over and over, wishing Mrs. Brooke weren't beautiful, too.

Of course it was impossible to go any further. Why not say so, and be done with it? Why sit here, fold your hands, be insulted? Because—well, because it would be better still to pretend to be eager, and then when everything was settled, a polite little speech, a bow, a few words about one's own sense of humor, and then she would go away, leaving Mrs. Brooke a bit surprised. She would go away, back to the apartment where you climbed five flights of stairs, and the chest of drawers would wobble so, and the carpet looked sad because it had seen better days.

Yes, that was it. She would be mean, sit here and make Mrs. Brooke think she was eager, while Shevlin pushed the thing through. Shevlin did what he wanted in this apartment. That was strange but so. Then—then—the right words would come.

It was hard to listen, thinking of that, hard to listen to Shevlin marshalling plans, directing this Fate she was never to have. Newport—yes. Newport would do! Carley? And right away. Clothes—all the clothes she wanted—but the right things—quiet things, belonging to her type. Then the season—introduce her at a dance. Not too formal. More quietly at a tea, scare all the fat women with marriageable daughters into Narragansett Bay—a quiet demure girl who had been educated in France. . .

A whirl of pictures. Margie's dark head, pressed back against the big chair, was filled with a longing, a sad little longing. She would never have anything like that, never have anything to remember. And there was Mrs. Brooke—biting her lip—looking queerly tense.

Margie Marsh said quickly: "Oh, but Mrs. Brooke isn't anxious to do this, Mr. Shevlin. Can't you persuade her, make her feel how important it is to me?"

"She feels it perfectly, don't you, Carley?"

"Does it matter?"

"Not a bit!" Shevlin answered that in his dry, hard voice that seemed to bite his words.

Then Margie could see Mrs. Brooke's face change, look stricken and hurt and miserable for one flying instant, so that when she looked again she was not sure it had looked like that. Only it was time to tell her now. Why be so mean? "I'm ashamed of myself!" Margie's inner voice declared roundly. "Ashamed! If I were Mrs. Brooke, would I like to be asked to lie about someone—a stranger? Would I like to do anything as mad as this for a stranger? Of coure I wouldn't. And I'd be much horrider—oh, much!"

The butler stood in the doorway. A grave, elderly butler. From somewheres within those soft silent rooms a bell had rung, and Mr. Shevlin was wanted on the phone.

Margie was alone with Carlotta Brooke.

"I'm sorry. I meant to tell you right away. Of course I'm not serious about this. I never really thought of doing it. So you see—everything's all right."

But no look of relief there, no sudden warmth lighting up the tired, handsome face. Instead a voice like a whisper, tinged with bitterness and unfathomable regret.

"Do you think that makes any difference? Do you really think that matters? As if you and he won't keep on seeing each other just the same! Why, I'd rather have you near me—where at least I know what's happening."

To Be Continued.

MEDITATIONS of a MARRIED WOMAN

by HELEN ROWLAND

TRUTH WITHOUT SALT

INTUITION is a woman's diabolical faculty for discovering a man's "reasons" for doing something foolish when he didn't know he HAD any.

A man knows instinctively when the "last word" of a love-affair has been written; but a woman always insists on blotting up the page with a lot of tearful, tender, or tormenting postscrips.

By this time, you have probably discovered that there was really no more danger in leaving your husband shut up in the office all summer with an attractive stenographer than there would be in leaving a small boy shut up in the pantry with the chocolate cake.

HELEN ROWLAND

Nothing makes a man quite so indignant at a woman as to discover that even all his most artistic lying can't convince her of his sincerity.

When a woman begs a man to tell her "the whole, plain, bitter truth," he should have the intelligence to know that she means she wants it sugar-coated and flavored to tickle her palate—and even then she can swallow only a little bit of it at a time.

* * *

A summer love-affair is always an amusing diversion for one but it takes a little time and finesse to find out WHICH one.

These days it always astonishes a man to discover that he will have to struggle to win a girl; but nothing so astounds and annoys him as to discover that he won't have to struggle a bit to lose her.

* * *

As long as a man has a few front teeth, a few strands of hair across his head and his single-blessedness, he just can't help thinking of himself as a dangerous "temptation" to the women.

An attractive girl has to marry these days in order to get somebody to take her around who won't make love to her.

"My dear, I HONestly think it is HIGH TIME some BIMbo inVENted the COOLidge STOCKing, do you know what I mean? Because, ACtually, my dear, I get TOO TIRED of the HOSE situATion because it is practicably ALways comPLETELY out of conTROL, 'specially since I have been wearing these long GARters. I mean I HONestly think STOCKings are POSitively perVERted because, ANYways, why do they have to RUN when you WALK? But, my dear, I MUST tell you the FUNniest thing about MOTHer because that odd soul SIMply SLAYS me because she is ACtually the most naIVE and inGEnius mortal I've ever KNOWN. You see I sort of ASKED her to MEND this large-sized RUN in my STOCKing the other day and in the COURSE of the operAtion I casurally inQUIRED if she thought my LEGS were getting too FAT, whereupon she was honestly all hot and BOTHered because she said in HER day girls didn't HAVE 'LEGS'—can you BEAR it, my dear? I mean I wonder what MEN had to LOOK at, my dear—I ACtually DO!"

What Happened to the Mysterious Letter?

AS I SAW that the soiled letter which the red-bearded man had said was a message had disappeared from the top of the bookcase, I felt my pulses quicken with the consciousness that there was some sort of a mystery concerning the bizarre communication and the man who brought it, and that Miss Lincoln's desire to see the secret hollow in the gatepost had not been prompted by the idle curiosity which I almost had come to believe had actuated her.

Almost—but not quite. I realized that from the first I subconsciously had sensed the terrified comprehension of the "message" which had been so spectacularly brought to her and that when she sped back to the house upon her pretended errand, I had known that it was to retrieve the letter from its exposed position, and to hide it securely—perhaps even upon her person—although she disdainfully had retreated when the red-bearded man had extended the soiled envelope in his grimy hand, and arrogantly had commanded him to lay it on the sundial and go.

Quickly I averted my eyes from the bookcase but not swiftly enough to escape Dicky's keen eyes. I saw him frown, and at Mary's guilty blink of the eyelids I knew that she also had shot a glance at the spot where the letter had rested.

Fortunately, however, Miss Lincoln, busy with the tea tray, had not noticed our glances, and for the next 10 minutes our call followed the perfunctory course of similar visits all over the world. Nothing more was said about any further exploration of the grounds, and I, for one, was well content to stay upon the sheltered, homy veranda. I had had quite enough excitement for one day.

When we rose to leave Miss Lincoln put out her hands impulsively to me.

"You will come again, soon, won't you?" she asked. "It is very—lonely here, very strange."

She was like a lovely, wistful child in her appeal, and there vanished swiftly from my mind the slight but very distinct prejudice I had found myself indulging against her.

"Of course we will," I said cordially, pressing her hands warmly, "and you must come to see us often. I hope your aunt and uncle also will be able to come."

She shook her head regretfully.

"I cannot promise that," she said. "Poor Tante rarely even gets outdoors. I am sure she never would be able to make the journey to your house. She is very frail. And my uncle—is rather difficult. No, I think I shall come by myself."

"You will be most welcome," I assured her, and she thanked me prettily, said a cordial goodby to Mary and to Dicky, and then, with a palpable air of having reserved the best till the last, she extended a hand to Noel.

"Mrs. Ticer tells me," she said, "that I am to be the cause of depriving you of luncheon, as she cannot get back to her house in time to prepare it. Will you not let me make amends by doing me the honor to be our guest at luncheon each day?"

Poor Noel flushed a brick red at this sudden onslaught, and I saw that Mrs. Ticer had not yet spoken to him about the change which would be made in his daily regime. So far, she evidently had gone home in the middle of the day and prepared luncheon for him. From Mary, standing next to me, there came a quick catch of the breath, unheard, I was sure, by the others, and I hastened to the rescue of the situation.

"You are so kind," I told our young hostess, "but Mr. Veritzen is already provided for. You see he is so old a friend of ours and Mrs. Ticer is so valued a neighbor that we have arranged the matter between us. Mr. Veritzen is to lunch with us as a regular thing, but"—as I saw her expressive face shadow with something very like disappointed chagrin—"I am sure that very often this summer we will exchange luncheon guests. You must come to us and our young people will come to you."

Steak en Casserole

Cut two pounds of tender steak into small serving pieces. Butter a casserole dish and lay in the steak in alternate layers with sliced potato, butter, pepper, salt and a little sugar, an onion chopped very fine. Dust with flour. Around the meat place little heaps of peas, and sliced carrots. Turn over all a cupful of good stock. Cover the dish and cook in the oven about an hour and a half.

BEWARE THE COUGH OR COLD THAT HANGS ON

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, and emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with twofold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist.

Prevents dishpan's dirty ring

WHEN you wash dishes in hard water, there is always a scum around the dishpan. It is dirty and hard to get off. But wash dishes in soft water . . . no scum and no dirty ring.

Why? The hardness in hard water combines with the soap and makes the scum. But use Melo to soften the water and scum can't form. Melo makes water as soft as rain water. It saves hands. It makes dishes sparkle. Get it at your grocer's.

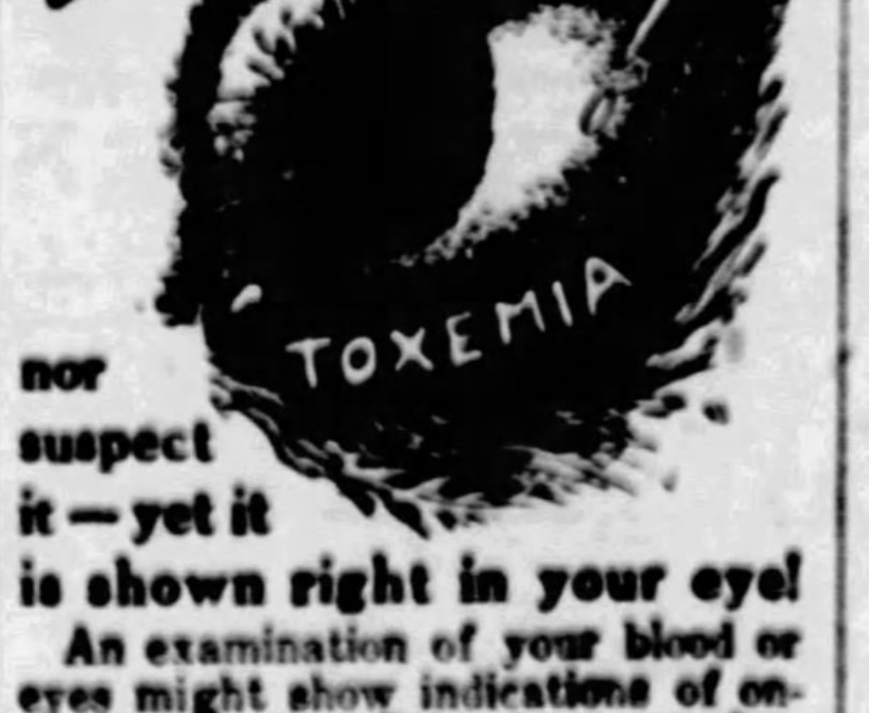
-and you DONT SEE IT



nor suspect it—yet it is shown right in your eye!

An examination of your blood or eyes might show indications of oncoming System Poisoning,—professionally known as "TOXEMIA",—if at times you have headaches, weak and nervous spells, heart palpitation, sour stomach and other dangerous attacks you can't seem to understand. Any one of these may be symptoms of this dangerous malady. If constipated, you take some ordinary laxative pills or water, but they don't eliminate the poisonous toxins that cling to intestinal lining. If your eyeball lacks the clear white signs of perfect health, take no chances! Clean out the poison wastes by taking Partola, the internal antiseptic and laxative, and keep your bowels working regularly, then you can laugh at the thought of poisons in your system.

Partola is pleasant to take. You chew these mint-flavored wafers at night, next day you feel bright and energetic. They give you a sense of security against many ills and disease. All druggists sell regular box of Partola 30¢, double size 60¢.

TOMORROW'S HOROSCOPE

Tuesday, October 25

AN interesting and eventful day is forecast from the lively operations of powerful planets. There will be many opportunities for recognition and probably honors from superiors or those in places of power.

New projects should flourish. New contracts are in order, but do not put in jeopardy these excellent openings by irascibility or any manner of tumultuous ardor. Calmness should win the day.

Those whose birthday it is are on the eve of a lively year and one of many openings for advancement and preferment. There may be some public honor or favor from those in high places, but do not jeopardize good fortune by rash or impulsive deportment.

A child born on this day should be versatile and energetic and may rise to a place of honor or competence through its own endeavors as well as through favoritism.

Notable Nativities: Johann Strauss waltz king; Georges Bizet, composer.

As We Grow Older

Proper Kidney Action Is More Than Ever Important

AS WE grow older, there is apt to be a gradual slowing up of bodily functions.

The kidneys are the blood filters. If their action becomes sluggish they do not thoroughly cleanse the blood of poisonous wastes. This tends to make one tired and achy, with often nagging backache, drowsy headaches and dizziness. A common symptom of imperfect kidney action is scanty or burning excretions.

Elderly people recommend Doan's Pills. This tested diuretic is endorsed the country over. Ask your neighbor!

PLOT TO KILL THREE CHARGED

By Universal Service.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Oct. 24—Charged with conspiring to kill three relatives to acquire their estates, Miss Bessie Morise, 40, was placed on trial here today. Her colored maid, Mamie Todd, who is accused of aiding her mistress, will be tried at the same time.

The three, who were to be the alleged victims of the spinster, are her sister, Mrs. Elmer Dey, her brother-in-law, Elmer Dey, and their adopted son, Raymond Britten, 16. All reside at Prospect Plains, N. J.

There was to have been a fourth victim, George F. Morise, 84, wealthy father of Miss Morise, according to the prosecution. He died last month, and this case against her will be dropped.

Had he lived, the father would have been the staunchest supporter of his daughter. He steadfastly refused to believe any of the charges against her, and offered $10,000 bail for her release, but she has remained in jail since her arrest June 17.

MUSTARD HOLLOW WINS OVER WESTINGHOUSE, 1-0

Tech Got An Even Break Saturday—The Freshmen Won

★ SUN-TELEGRAPH ★ SPORTS ★

THREE CHESSMEN TIED

LONDON, Oct. 24.—Three men are tied for first place in the international chess masters' tournament at the British Empire Club. By winning his game from Dr. J. R. Tartakower, France, today, Nimzowitsch of Denmark moved up a peg and this brought Vidmar also into the bracket for first. F. R. Marshall, United States, is fourth.

THROUGH the SPORT LENS by HAVEY BOYLE

POST-MORTEMS on the Pitt-Carnegie Tech game revealed that Letzelter, the Carnegie fullback, and not Harpster, the quarterback, as generally rumored, was the Tech player who was unfortunate enough to be in the way of Hagen's punt which rolled innocently enough to the five yard line, and then took a malevolent bound right at Letzelter's pants. Donchess, Pitt end, quite properly leaped on the ball, looked up at the bewildered and chagrined Letzelter, and in effect said: "Bad boy," as he shook a triumphant finger at Letzelter.

HAVEY BOYLE.

FURTHER dissection of the game revealed that about the most surprised boy in the U. S. A. was Mr. Kuosman, a Carnegie substitute end, who in the fourth period caught a forward pass, and was downed on the three-yard line. What surprised Mr. Kuosman was that he had not registered a touchdown. As he was tackled he saw a white line which he took to represent the goal line, but after having been jarred by a Pitt tackler, Kuosman was further jarred to learn that he had not registered a touchdown. The most disconcerting thing about it is that to his last day on earth the substitute end will believe that he could have rolled easily for the distance which at the time he was tackled he did not think he needed.

THERE is a suggestion in this play for the men who chalk the gridiron. The goal lines should in some manner be marked differently than the other lines on the field. In the East the gridiron engineers are making the goal lines a foot wide to make them wider than the various lines which show the 10, 20, 30, 40 and 50-yard lines. With a wider line the Tech end would not have got it mixed up as he did, when after he caught a forward he was downed.

TECH players on two successive Saturdays have played Wash-Jeff and Pitt, two of the best teams in the country. What do the Carnegie players think when asked to compare Wash-Jeff and Pitt. It is the general opinion, a trusted spy reports, that Carnegie views Wash-Jeff as superior to the Panthers. They do not mean that Pitt will necessarily lose, because between now and the Wash-Jeff game, Pitt may improve, but on the basis of returns in the games Tech took part in the Techites believe, Wash-Jeff right now is the superior eleven.

The Carnegie players mean "eleven," too, and not squad. It is their idea that Wash-Jeff can throw a first eleven onto the field which is superior to Pitt's first eleven. The Techites, however, believe that in the matter of reserves Pitt is a little more fortunate than Wash-Jeff. After the Wash-Jeff regulars wear down they have not the replacements that Pitt holds ready to throw into any breach.

TECH players get this idea after having observed such fellows as Hoban, Fisher and Parkinson holding places in the lineup for a time instead of Edwards, Booth and Hagan, and after having seen reserves like Fyock, Salata and Demoise handy to be called upon.

In a measure this confirms the sincere expression of the capable Andy Kerr at Wash-Jeff, who said earlier in the year that he would not take off his hat to many teams, with his FIRST STRING eleven in shape, but he said his reserves were far behind his first team in ability.

TECH'S verdict will be used as good propaganda by Dr. Sutherland, the Pitt coach, who faces the task of getting the Panthers sufficiently stirred for the game two weeks hence with Wash-Jeff. He will be entirely truthful in telling the Panthers that Tech considered them inferior to the Presidents—and that is an unbiased verdict coming from two separate experiences which qualify the Techites as expert judges.

PITT, as a prohibitive favorite, had a certain disadvantage to overcome in the Tech game which they will not have to face against Wash-Jeff. It was only natural that the Panthers could not be entirely "scared" against Tech because it was in the book that Tech was inferior. The Panthers against Wash-Jeff will be sufficiently primed, mentally. They will know that they will meet Amos, Cook and company at their best.

The coming game between Pitt and the Washingtonians should break all stadium records as both Western Pennsylvania teams will go into this game with the national spotlight playing upon them. Each is of championship fibre and it may be this game in Pittsburgh that may settle a national title.

ROSS YOUNG, Giant outfielder, is dead. You remember him, of course, a small, energetic fellow, who was known as a "try" ball player. In right field for New York he was fleet of foot, owned sure hands, and an accurate throwing arm. At the plate, in his best days, he was ever dangerous. Strong and agile he appeared, and this made his fatal illness all the more strange to the fans who had learned sometime ago that he was in a hopeless physical condition.

He was 30 years old. He started his professional career in 1914, joined the Giants in 1918, and ended his playing days with that club in 1926. Through his career he missed hitting .300 but once and that was in 1925 when his illness took strong hold of him. In three years he hit

Free Kick Big Factor

By TOM BIRKS.

MUSTARD HOLLOW staged its comeback yesterday following that defeat by the Pittsburgh Rovers by defeating Westinghouse by the score of 1 to 0 in the second round of the national open challenge cup at Elizabeth.

True it was a penalty kick that turned the tide in favor of the upriver club, but then penalties count that is why they were imposed. But by the irony of fate Westinghouse had a similar chance in the second half of the game, but the Valley club kick promptly shot past the post, and a glorious chance was missed to force the game into an extra period.

It was a brilliant game. Both clubs seemed primed for the fray and each moment was bitterly fought until Corns blew the final whistle.

Living up to the reputation made as cup fighters, Westinghouse went down to defeat fighting hard. Its forwards could not break through that stone wall defense of Miller and Hamilton, but at the other end of the field, Wilson, Paton and Hodgkins were just as keen, and it was the breaks of fate that led to the penalty given for hands.

Mustard Hollow tried hard in the first part of the game but Secane was stopped each time. And at the other end of the field, Beveridge missed when well placed. Then just before half time came the fatal penalty.

Sickles took the kick, and Paton never had a chance.

The game was fast and furious in the second half. Noble and McNair were playing well, and then Westinghouse was awarded a penalty. Walker took the kick and missed. That settled the scoring. Mustard Hollow entered the third round of the national race. The lineup:

Mustard Hollow—1.		Westinghouse—0.

was the second poor day the Pitt team has had, for the Panthers failed to stand the long trip to Des Moines as well as was expected, and did not play up to snuff even in the 32-0 win against Drake.

TEAM HAS CLASS

Few people realize the power and class of Sutherland's Golden Panthers this year. Remember, it is a team that Jock has had under his guidance for three years, with a fast charging, powerful line and a backfield led by the scintillating Welch and the colorful and driving Booth. It's a team with a well conceived and admirably handled aerial attack, the most deadly weapon in football today.

Defensively, it is well nigh perfect, Tech's blocking of Hagan's punt and the subsequent touchdown being the only one registered against it this fall.

When considering Pitt and W. & J. it must be taken into consideration that W. & J. teams never play at their best when in Pittsburgh, while Pitt teams always play over their heads. This is a condition that is exactly the reverse of the Tech and Pitt situation.

Even though W. & J. should beat Pitt, it would not put the Panthers out of the running, for if they should come back and win from both Nebraska and Penn State, they would be entitled to high ranking for the reason that the schedule they played was by far superior to the W. & J. card. Nebraska, Penn State, Drake, Tech, West Virginia, Grove City and Thiel and Allegheny, such a list furnishes a stiffer test than Waynesburg, Bethany, Western Maryland, Thiel, Tech, Bucknell, Lafayette and West Virginia.

Cooper, showed similar fine tackling stuff for Carnegie Tech.

THE variety of Pitt's attack on Saturday is shown by the fact that Sutherland used four different styles of forward passes, in addition to a triple pass and a crisscross from which three types of plays were run. He also used a variation of the spinner play perfected by Carnegie Tech five years ago. This and Jock's running plays, also from two formations, gave the Panther attack extreme flexibility.

It is difficult to recall other teams that showed such a varied attack as Pitt displayed in the West Virginia and Carnegie Tech games this year.

The keystone of this offensive is, of course, Welch's remarkable versatility and endurance, and the fact that Hagan, the punter, is also a ball carrier and passer.

Just note the variety of passes that Pitt completed Saturday: Welch to Hagan, Welch to Donchess, Welch to Guarino, Welch to Booth, Hagan to Welch, and Hagan to Guarino.

THIS shows the Panthers' strength both in tossing and receiving. They could have done even more in that respect probably but for the injury to Edwards shortly after the game started. Edwards is Pitt's best passer, next to Welch; is also one of the best receivers and is much faster than some of the others. There is more chance of his getting away after catching one than there is with Guarino, Hagan or Parkinson.

It is said that Carnegie Tech had a slight weight advantage in the line, but Pitt had the heavier backfield. The Skibos had the heaviest two and the lightest two men in the game. Pitt has a slightly lighter line than for several years, but the weight is well distributed, and the light linemen, Fox and Kern, are sturdy in proportion to their weight.

WHILE on the subject of linemen, you can always leave it to Wally Steffen to come up with a good eventually. He suffered a heavy loss when Yoder and Manby were graduated, but his present line has come along so fast that on Saturday you could hardly recognize it as the same string of forwards that played against W. & J. only a week before.

Cooper was the outstanding star of the Schenley Park lads' line in stopping Pitt plays and at times his work was quite good enough to recall the great Yoder of the last three years.

LOCAL fans cannot recall a previous instance in which such a lengthy period was consumed in untangling the players and baring the ball after a touchdown as on the occasion of Pitt's first crossing of the Plaid goal line.

Both teams were piled in a heap and it required several minutes for the officials to force the players to arise, one by one, until the bottom of the pile was reached and the ball was found over the line.

Pitt players say they remained in a heap to prevent the ball from being pushed back inside the line. They assert that on the preceding play, Welch actually had the ball over the goal line, but that in the piling up that followed the spheroid was pushed back.

When Welch went over on the following play, they say, they were deliberately slow in rising from the pile-up in order to make sure that the ball would be found at the point over the line to which Gibby had advanced it.

BABE, LOU STILL AT IT

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 24.—(INS.)—Baseball fans of the Bay district today were convinced that Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig were entitled to their rating as home run hitters. Each got two homers in two games played yesterday. Gehrig hit a circuit wallop at Oakland in the morning when his team defeated one headed by Ruth by a score of 6 to 2. Ruth clouted two homers in the afternoon game played here, his team trimming Gehrig's by a score of 15 to 4. Gehrig also crashed out a homer in the second game.

HOWARD U. BEATEN

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Oct. 24.—West Virginia Collegiate Institute Saturday defeated Howard University of Washington, 6 to 0, in the annual football game here between the two rival Negro institutions. Early in the game a driving attack by Institute put Nash over with a touchdown, but thereafter, though each team was close to the goal line, a solid wall of defense on both sides prevented further scoring.

O'Hara Signs as Pro At Westmoreland

Peter O'Hara, one of the leading professionals of the district, has been chosen to succeed Nelson Zimmerman as professional of the Westmoreland Country Club, according to an announcement by the Westmoreland officials this morning.

O'Hara, who is aged 36 years, is a native of Dublin, Ireland, coming to the United States in 1915. He started his professional career at White Beaches, N. J., one of his pupils there being Miss Maureen Orcutt, one of the leading women golfers in the country.

After serving as pro at White Beaches, O'Hara served in a similar capacity at Shackamaxon, N. J., and the Pittsburgh Field Club.

O'Hara finished fifth in the Southern open championship at Pinehurst this year, after leading the field at the end of the first day's play.

"What, with Nebraska, Wash.-Jeff, and Penn State still to play?" somebody shot back. "Don't be ridiculous."

Red Kennedy, the Tech backfield flash, got into the game, replacing Glen Moorhead, who had been running the Pitt ends and secondary defense ragged in the opening period, in which Tech easily outplayed the Panthers.

"Watch that baby go!" somebody piped.

"Well, if he's any better than the guy whose place he's taking, show me the assistant to the assistant to this guy," was the bright and snappy retort.

ON A punt the ball cut the sideline in a corner of the field and bounded under some temporary seats, from which it had to be retrieved.

"There goes the old ball game!" chirped one of the writers. "And what a story that'll make, all about the big game being called on account of a lost ball. Lots of human interest stuff and all that, you know. Poor little orphan football gets tired of being kicked around and takes a runout without even stopping to say goodbye."

THE game's over. Somebody suggests a committee be sent down to interview the referee on the official score. "No sense in finding out two days later that the touchdown goals weren't kicked, as in the Tech-W. & J. game a week ago," he explains.

FOUR ELEVENS IN LINE FOR TITLE

SPORT COMMENT

by JAMES J. LONG

IT IS not at all surprising that last Saturday's annual gridiron battle between Pitt and Carnegie Tech is still a topic of animated discussion among the football followers of this district, as that struggle of 1927 will always stand out as one of the hardest and most fiercely fought in all the long list of annual combats between the local schools.

Two of the officials, Crowley and Sharpe, say that because of the fierceness of play and the terrific pace at which both teams fought, it was one of the toughest games in which they ever "worked," and "Chalky" Williamson, who was in the dressing rooms when the players came off the field after the game, reports that he never saw two elevens so near to being completely exhausted.

EXCEPT for the seemingly tireless iron man, Gibby Welch, who sprinted off the field when taken out after he had completed his usual brilliant day's work, most of the gridders on both teams were "down" as a result of the hard fighting under a sun that gave comfort to the spectators but that was entirely too warm for the players on the field.

There was credit and glory for both sides at the finish. The Panthers again proved themselves a powerful machine and came up to expectations by scoring a deserved victory by a convincing demonstration of superiority.

The Skibos, as usual, also came out of the fray with their reputation for gameness and fighting spirit unmarred, for though forced to bow to a stronger foe they gave an exhibition of determined battling in the face of defeat that made them deserving of heaps of credit.

Any team can look good when it is winning, but it takes an eleven with the unsurpassed spirit of Carnegie Tech to look good when it is losing.

ASIDE from the usual brilliant running of Welch when he finally cut loose late in the game, his splendid forward passing, and the great running of Moorhead for the Tartan, an analysis of the game shows that other remarkable features were the Hagan's long, well-placed and intelligent punting; Cutler's accurate passing and clever all-around play, his passing resembling that of his teacher, Charley Bowser; the variety of Pitt's attack and Cooper's strong play at left tackle for the Skibos in the first half.

In addition to being a remarkable punter, the best that Pitt has had since Williamson in intelligence and placing ability, Hagan is one of the grittiest kids that ever played football. He has been injured repeatedly, and was laid out three times Saturday, but he not only came back each time for more but played as brilliantly as ever.

THIS has been his record again and again. He played in four games last year, and brilliantly at that, when he was in such bad shape that if Coach Sutherland had had a competent substitute for him he would not have allowed him to remain in the game.

With all due credit to Welch, it must be said, too, that Hagan helps Gibby a great deal more than Welch helps Jimmy in the way of boxing the opposing tackle in off-tackle plays and end runs.

Cutler is entitled to much of the credit for Pitt's fine forward passing and kicking, because of his quick, accurate and well-timed passes. He again showed himself to be a splendid defensive player also.

The tackling was brilliant on both sides. This calls to mind something that is most apparent to men who have been watching the games here for years—that since Sutherland became coach Pitt has never failed to excel her opponents in tackling.

IT MUST be admitted that neither Sutherland nor any one else equals "Pop" Warner in strategy, or in mastery of tactics, but many Pitt men contend that in teaching fundamentals Sutherland is a better coach than Warner, a claim that has also been made for Herb McCracken. They say that the teams of Sutherland and McCracken, as a whole, tackle and block better and they usually also have the sound interference that "Pop" develops.

Throughout this season, a feature of Pitt's play has been the sure, deadly tackling of the whole team, including line players as well as backs. Cutler, Fox, Kern, Donchess and Fyock on Saturday made tackles that would have attracted wide attention were it not for the fact that local fans have become accustomed to hard tackling by the Panthers. Kern practically always plays a great game at tackle.

Harpster and English, as well as

PITT, IRISH, NEW YORK AND W.-J. BEST

By JESS CARVER.

FOUR great football machines, undefeated and untied, and for that matter, unhurried in their games so far this fall, are pointing their prows today towards the mythical and golden port of the nation's 1927 college football championship.

Pitt, Notre Dame, New York University and W. & J., three from the East and one from the Midwest, loom at present as the most likely candidates for championship honors.

There are 10 elevens in the country today that have come through their games so far without defeat or without being tied. In addition to the four mentioned they are Dartmouth, Princeton, California, Georgia and Georgia Tech.

Were it not for the fact that two of the six have to play Yale, a third face Notre Dame and another engage Stanford, five or six might be counted among the leaders. But I do not believe that Dartmouth will beat Yale, or that Princeton's green line will be able to hold the Blue. And Georgia Tech will hardly down Notre Dame. Warner will likely beat California.

The W. & J.-Pitt game this year, scheduled for a week from Saturday in the Stadium here, will be one of the country's biggest football games. Both are certain to enter the fray with unsullied records, as both have let-down contests carded for the coming week-end. (Pitt plays Allegheny and W. & J. meets Thiel.

PITT LOOKS BEST

There are many who would rank W. & J. ahead of Pitt, basing their assertions on the defeat the Presidents handed Lafayette. But W. & J. didn't have near the trouble beating Lafayette that they had downing Western Maryland, for Lafayette, if the truth be known, is far from being the powerful and formidable eleven it has been during the past three years. The fact that the best it could get from a weak and uninspired West Virginia varsity was a draw indicates to some extent the power of the Leopards this year.

Of course, W. & J. with a backfield such as it has, is a dangerous team. Tech and Western Maryland are the two major elevens to be defeated by the Red and Black in addition to Lafayette. But even in victory against Tech, W. & J. failed to impress, for the play of the line was far from good.

Pitt beat Tech Saturday 23-7. Except for a blocked kick, which would never have been blocked had the Panther line not been so anxious to get down the field and tackle Harpster that it let the Plaid line charge through, the Tartans would have been shut out. Pitt played ragged football, the line especially turning in a very mediocre performance. It

Hinkey Haines Doesn't Heed New Rules

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—(AP.)—The habits of a football life-time cannot be broken in one short season.

Proof of that was given here yesterday during the professional football game between the New York Giants and the Frankford Yellow Jackets. Hinkey Haines, former Penn State star, received a forward pass from a New York teammate eight yards over the goal line and tried to go the remaining two yards to the goal posts, forgetting the new rule that put the posts 10 yards back.

Five Frankford players, laboring under the same impression, dropped Haines with a thud, thinking they had averted a touchdown by two yards.

SPEAKING of SPORTS

SUN-TELEGRAPH SPORTS EDITOR

PRESS box observations always are interesting, regardless of the event. Take the Pitt-Carnegie Tech football game in the Stadium last Saturday, for instance.

First there was the speculation about the size of the crowd. Guesses ran all the way from 50,000 to 60,000. Some said they had seen larger crowds in the Panther bowl, others that this one was a record-breaker. The latter opinion proved correct.

Then the comment on the delay in the Tartans' arrival on the field. Pitt was out there warming up for some minutes before Tech arrived.

"If this were a fight, I'd say Tech is in the dressing room refusing to come out until the gate is counted and its guarantee is turned over," chirped one wise cracker.

PITT scored its first touchdown when Gibby Welch hit off tackle four times inside the five-yard line. The referee had some trouble getting the pileup on the final down disentangled, and there were anxious moments while his decision on whether or not it was a touchdown was awaited.

When Pitt was declared to have scored, one of the press box inhabitants was furious. "It wasn't a touchdown," he declared angrily. "I'd swear the ball wasn't over."

"How could you tell from 'way up here?" he was asked.

Two men sitting near him had been watching the proceedings through field glasses and they were willing to abide by the arbiter's decision.

"LOOK at Wally Steffen down there near the bench," somebody observed at this juncture. "He's as sore as a wet hen. Bet he thinks his boys got the worst of it on that one."

And, sure enough, there was the Tech coach, iron hat and all, beating a path as he strode up and down before his bench in what appeared to be high dudgeon.

A little later came the second Pitt touchdown. Again Tech fought it off until the final down and there was a question about whether or not Welch had gone over. This was an even tougher mass for the referee to pull apart.

"Say," said the man who had protested the first touchdown. "There it goes again. What did I tell you? Out West the referee wouldn't have given Pitt either one of those touchdowns. The ball is dead where the runner's forward progress is stopped, not where he stretches himself out in the mob. Bet Walter Eckersall, if he had been the referee, wouldn't have allowed either one of those touchdowns."

INSTINCTIVELY we looked down upon Judge Steffen. Again he was parading under his iron kelly, but if he was sore about this tally it couldn't be determined from such a distance.

Somebody started a discussion about crowds at football games. "Can't tell me," he said, "that the radio hasn't hurt the attendance at football games. Especially with the high prices for seats prevailing. Who wouldn't stay at home, except on a bright, sunshiny day like this, and listen to the game over the radio rather than come out and risk pneumonia and go through all the discomfort of looking at a pack of young huskies going through a flock of beneficial setting-up exercises?"

TECH finally blocked a punt, shortly after the start of the second half, and in two more plays had a touchdown, the first time Pitt had been scored on this season.

"Blooie! There goes the record," quoth one of the scribes. "And I was hoping Pitt would go through the

CANZONERI FAVORED TO DEFEAT DUNDEE

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—(AP.)—Tony Canzoneri enters the ring tonight against Johnny Dundee a decided favorite in their unofficial featherweight championship battle over 15 rounds. Odds on the youthful Brooklyn boxer have jumped from 6 to 5 to 8 to 5.

The fight is not recognized as a championship affair by the New York States Athletic Commission, but, inasmuch as Dundee gained his title from Eugene Criqui and never has been defeated since at the 126-pound weight, the winner probably will have as much claim to the title, insofar as public opinion is concerned, as Benny Bass, recognized as the titleholder by the National Boxing Association.

M'TIGUE IN CHICAGO

CHICAGO, Oct. 24. — (AP.)—Mike McTigue, the former world's light-heavyweight champion, who meets Mickey Walker, middleweight titleholder, has arrived to start training for the 10-round battle November 1. Walker will be here Wednesday, his manager, Jack Kearns said.

Dundee Receives Threat

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 24.—Joe Dundee, welterweight champion, who fights Ace Hudkins here next Saturday, has been threatened with death unless he gives up $10,000, according to a report made to police by his manager, Max Waxman, last night.

A bodyguard now accompanies the boxer to and from his training quarters.

Police said Waxman told them he received a note signed with three ink fingerprints several days ago, threatening death to Dundee unless a package containing $10,000 in currency was left in front of a store on Broadway yesterday morning.

Police had Waxman deposit a decoy package, but no one c[illegible] for it.

Mysterious telephone calls and suspicious characters in the neighborhood have caused Dundee and his manager to move three times during the past week, it was said.

Waxman, police said, declared that threats were made against him and Dundee in New York last June, before Dundee's fight with Pete Latzo, and Waxman was shot in the leg and slashed in the cheek.

The manager thinks the present threats may be the work of the same outfit.

ORDER ICEMEN TO REPORT

President Horace Townsend has sent out a letter to all Pirate hockey players to report at Duquesne Garden no later than Wednesday of next week.

Four of the players, Mickey McGuire, Johnny McKinnon, Duke McCurry and Roger Smith, already are in town and working out daily on the handball courts at Webster Hall, but the remaining members are not likely to arrive until the latter part of this week, with a few waiting until the time limit expires.

It was intimated at local headquarters today that Manager Cleghorn was dickering with a couple National League club owners for some new talent. Nothing definite is forthcoming from President Townsend, but it is reliably reported that a deal involving several players will be consummated within the next few days. Detroit, New York Americans and Les Canadiens are willing to do business with Manager Cleghorn, but whether or not the players offered are what the Pirate skipper desires is not known. Cleghorn wired he would be here tomorrow to take over the preliminary arrangements for the training period.

NEW CASTLE BOY LOST TO YALE GRID ELEVEN

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Oct. 24.—The end of the brilliant intercolegiate football career of Preston Flaherty, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Flaherty of this city and a student at Yale. He sustained a broken leg in scrimmage and will not be able to participate in the football games of his university.

His parents left Saturday to bring him home. He has been a member of the Yale varsity for three years and had been picked as a regular lineman last year, when he fractured his elbow. For two years he has been first reserve guard or tackle, and was one of Yale's leading baseball pitchers.

BOSTON, Oct. 24.—"I have not resigned—as yet," said Coach Jess Hawley of the Dartmouth football team last night in reply to a story which had him leaving the Hanover institution. Hawley intimated that he had considred resigning before the start of the present season but that a recent decision has not been made.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Oct. 24.—"Give your best or nothing!"

The creed of the New York Giants, of fighting John McGraw, their iron-fisted leader, and of all the men who play for the Giants and have played for them.

The creed by which Ross Young, great National League outfielder and most famous baseball man San Antonio ever boasted as a "home boy," lived—and died.

Ross' wonderful will, which doctors say kept him alive since last winter, gave in Saturday before disease which Ross knew for months was incurable, and the great New York right fielder quietly closed his eyes as he lay on his bed in the P. and S. Hospital and passed into the long sleep.

The country was shocked at the news. Messages of condolence began flowing in as word was flashed that Ross was gone. Young was ranked as one of the greatest outfielders in the history of the game. In one big season he was selected as the best outfielder in the National League by Babe Ruth in his annual all-American baseball selections.

LIKED BY M'GRAW

John McGraw, manager of the Giants and Ross' mentor throughout his major league career of nine seasons, said in training camp in San Antonio a few springs ago that Young was his "ideal ball player."

Young regarded McGraw as the greatest manager in the game, and McGraw's word to Young was law, his decisions final, his judgment infallible.

Young gave his all for the Giants and he gloried, modestly, in the fact that he found favor in the eyes of his boss.

Ross went thirsty to keep off dreaded fat, to stay in shape in order to give his best to McGraw and the Giants—and he ruined his kidneys. Bright's disease set in and Ross was forced out of the Giant lineup with a month to go in the 1926 season. He came home after the world series and went to bed.

"I'll get well," he said.

But anemia set in, his condition rapidly became worse and blood transfusion and his great will to live kept breath in his body.

Two weeks ago he was out to a football game at League Park sitting in the stands, chatting with friends.

"I feel like the devil," he grinned. "But I guess I can stand it. I'll beat this stuff yet."

But Ross was wrong. He died a martyr to team loyalty and the iron creed of the Giants, "your best or nothing."

Goldstein, Crowley Clash Again

TONIGHT'S FIGHT CARD

Phil Goldstein vs. Tommy Crowley, eight rounds.

Young Saylor vs. Teddy Esterbrook, eight rounds.

Nick Susnell vs. Joey LaGrey, eight rounds.

Tug Phillips vs. Walter Dickerson, eight rounds.

TONIGHT'S the night the local boxing fans have been looking forward to, bringing, as it does, to them the return battle between Tommy Crowley and Phil Goldstein, keen rivals, who put up such a great battle in the Motor Square Garden ring last Christmas afternoon, when they met in the final elimination for the featherweight championship of Pittsburgh. Their return battle will be in the same squared space.

Goldstein returned to Pittsburgh from New York Saturday, while Crowley has done all of his training right at home. Both declared yesterday they are fit for as hard a bout as their first meeting turned out to be. In that engagement each was on the floor and in danger of a knockout, Crowley first, in the second round, and Goldstein in the eighth and last round.

The preliminaries round out an all-star card for tonight. All of the boxers billed have appeared in main bouts or semi-finals in Pittsburgh and vicinity. The first bout is scheduled for 8:20.

JOCKEY TAKES OWN LIFE

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—(INS.)—Injuries suffered in a fall at the Jamaica track, it was believed today, drove Benny Marinelli, classed a few years ago as the country's leading jockey, to end his life by gas.

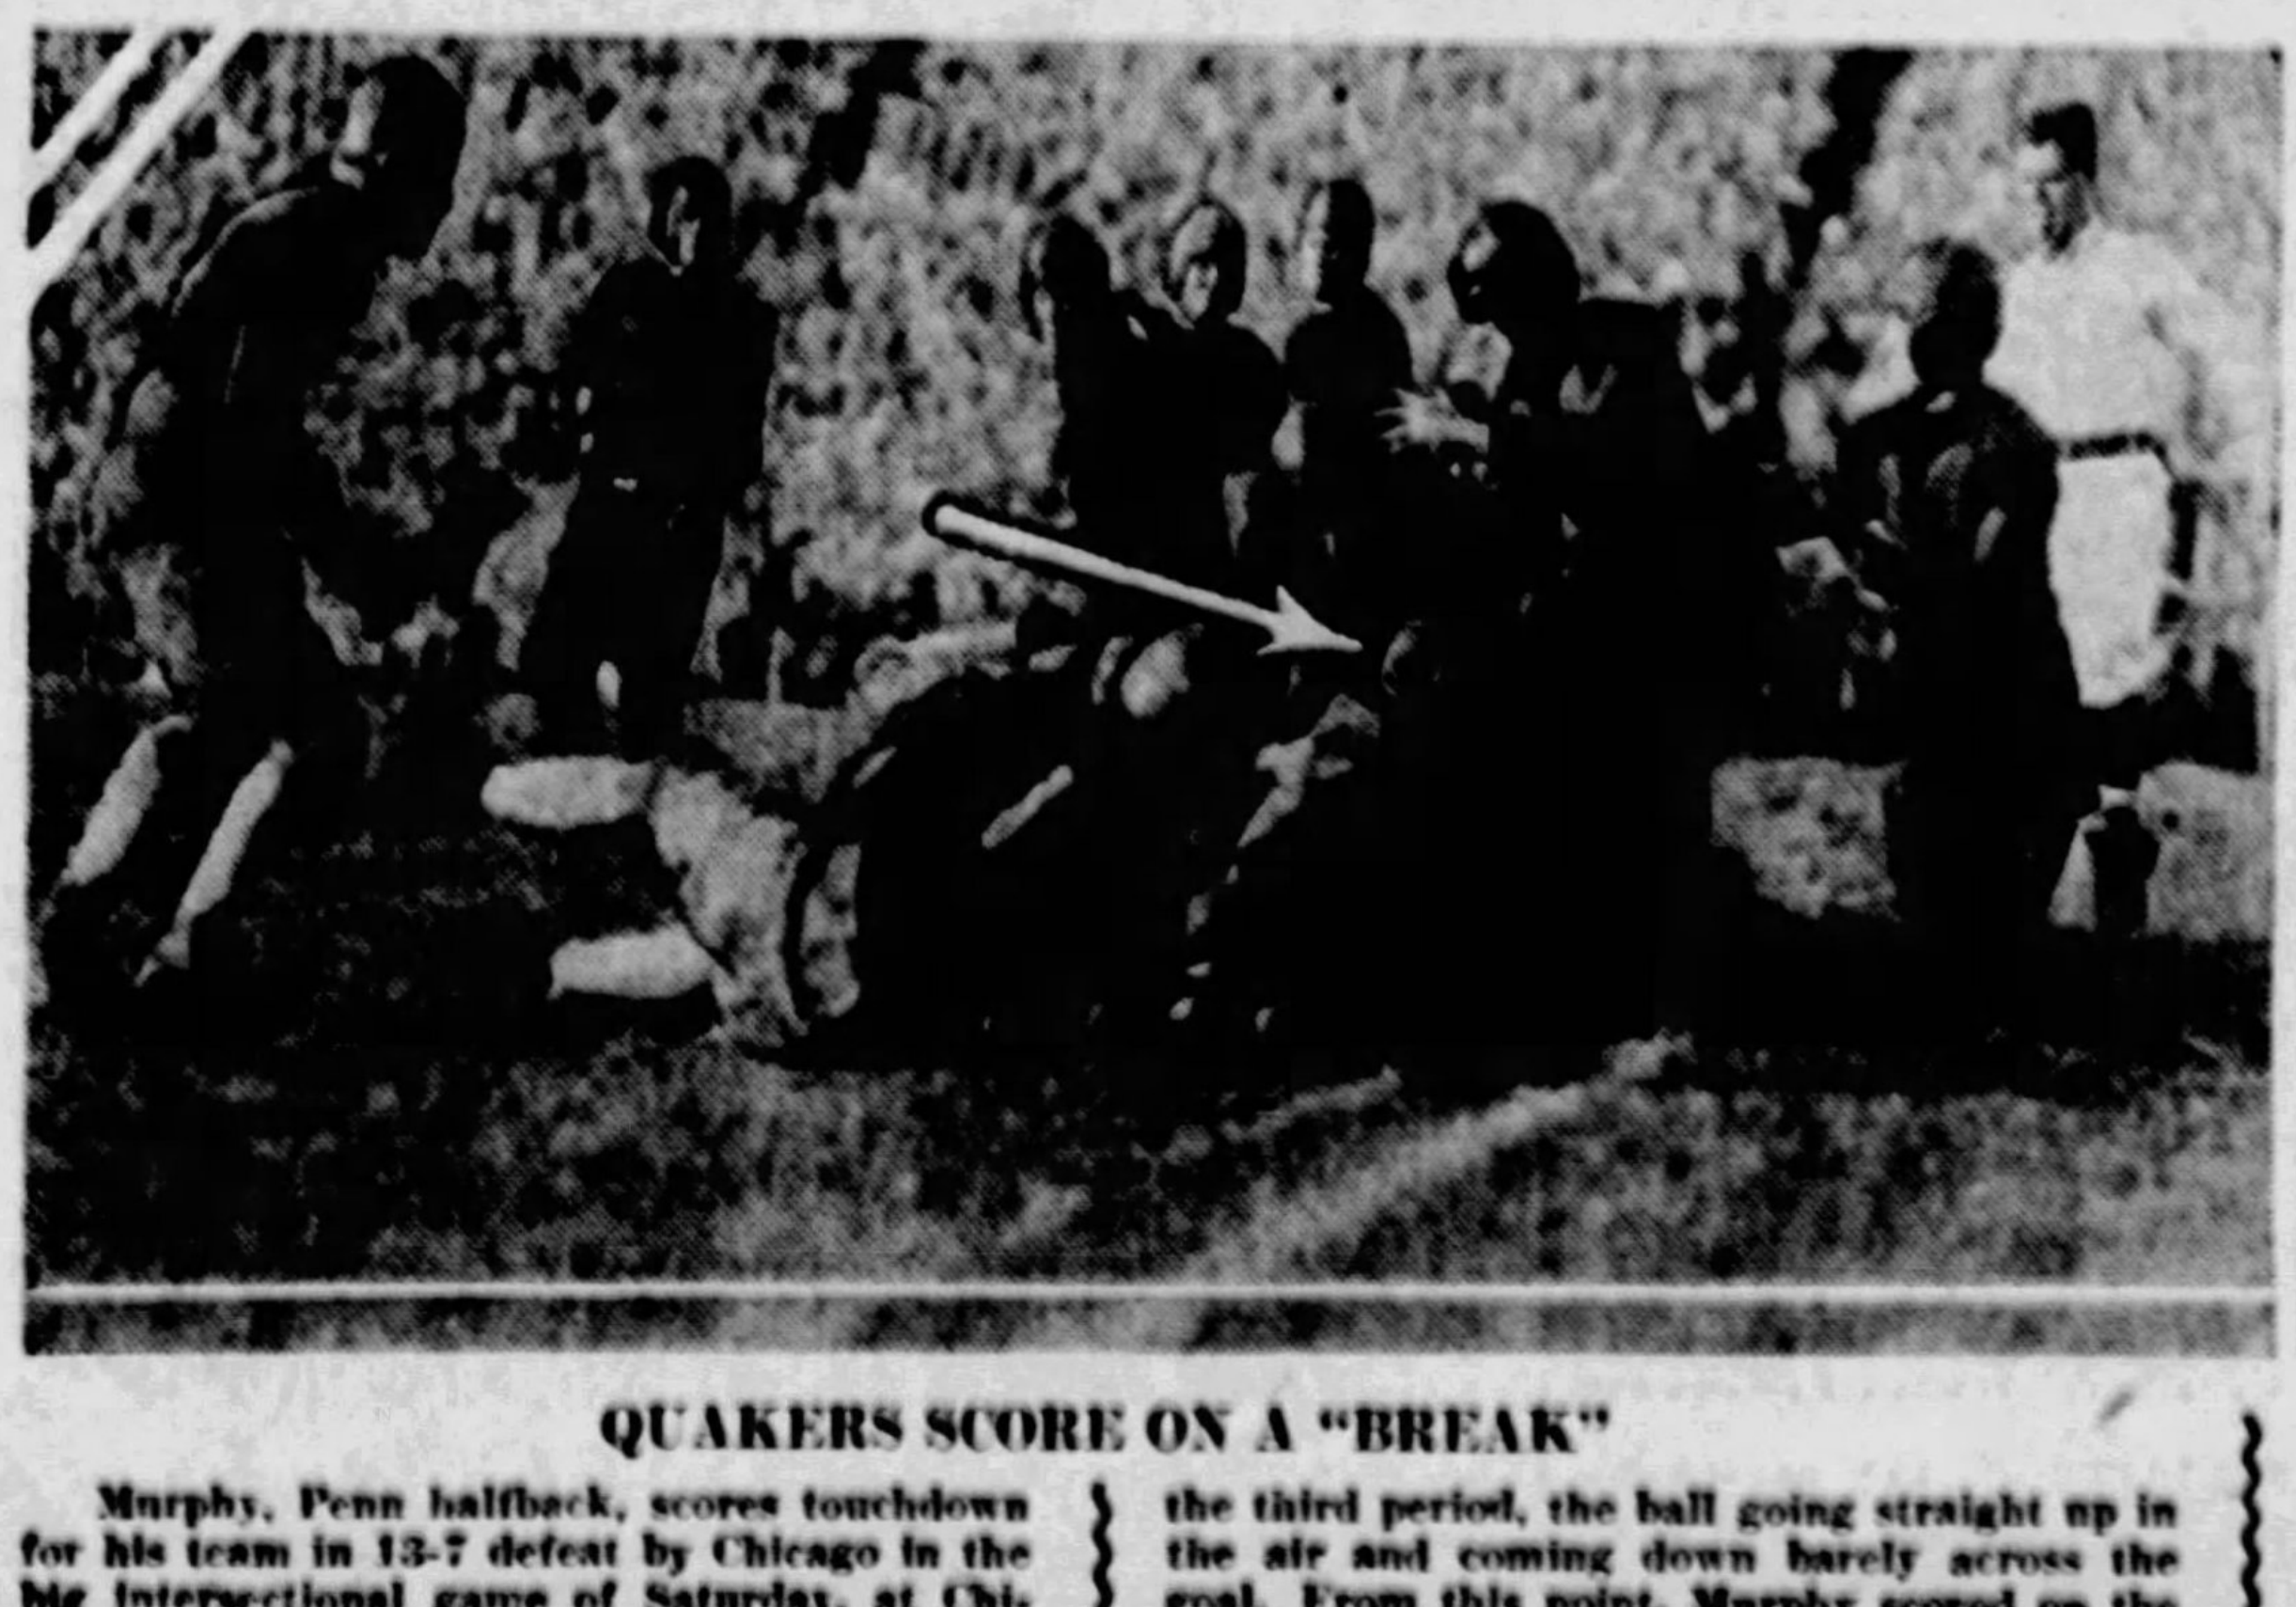
Marinelli, who was 23, committed suicide in a furnished room in Jamaica. He left a note which hinted that he had not been on good terms with his wife, who nursed him through his long illness after his fall. In it he demanded that she be refused permission to see his body and requested that he be buried in New Jersey.

Marinelli had come up from Maryland, where he rode his first winner since his accident, and was prepared to take part in the Jamaica meeting, riding in the colors of Mrs. A. Swenke.

He had been here for two weeks and was training daily at the track, working more than is customary for a jockey of his reputation in order to get back into trim.

He was known as the most reckless jockey of the present day. His accident occurred on May 9, 1925, when his horse, Upton, fell in the first race and Mark Fator, on Firearm, rode him down. Fator suffered minor injuries, while Marinelli sustained a fractured skull and internal hemorrhages.

SCORING PLAYS IN PENN'S :-: DEFEAT BY STAGG'S MAROONS :-: ON CHICAGO GRID

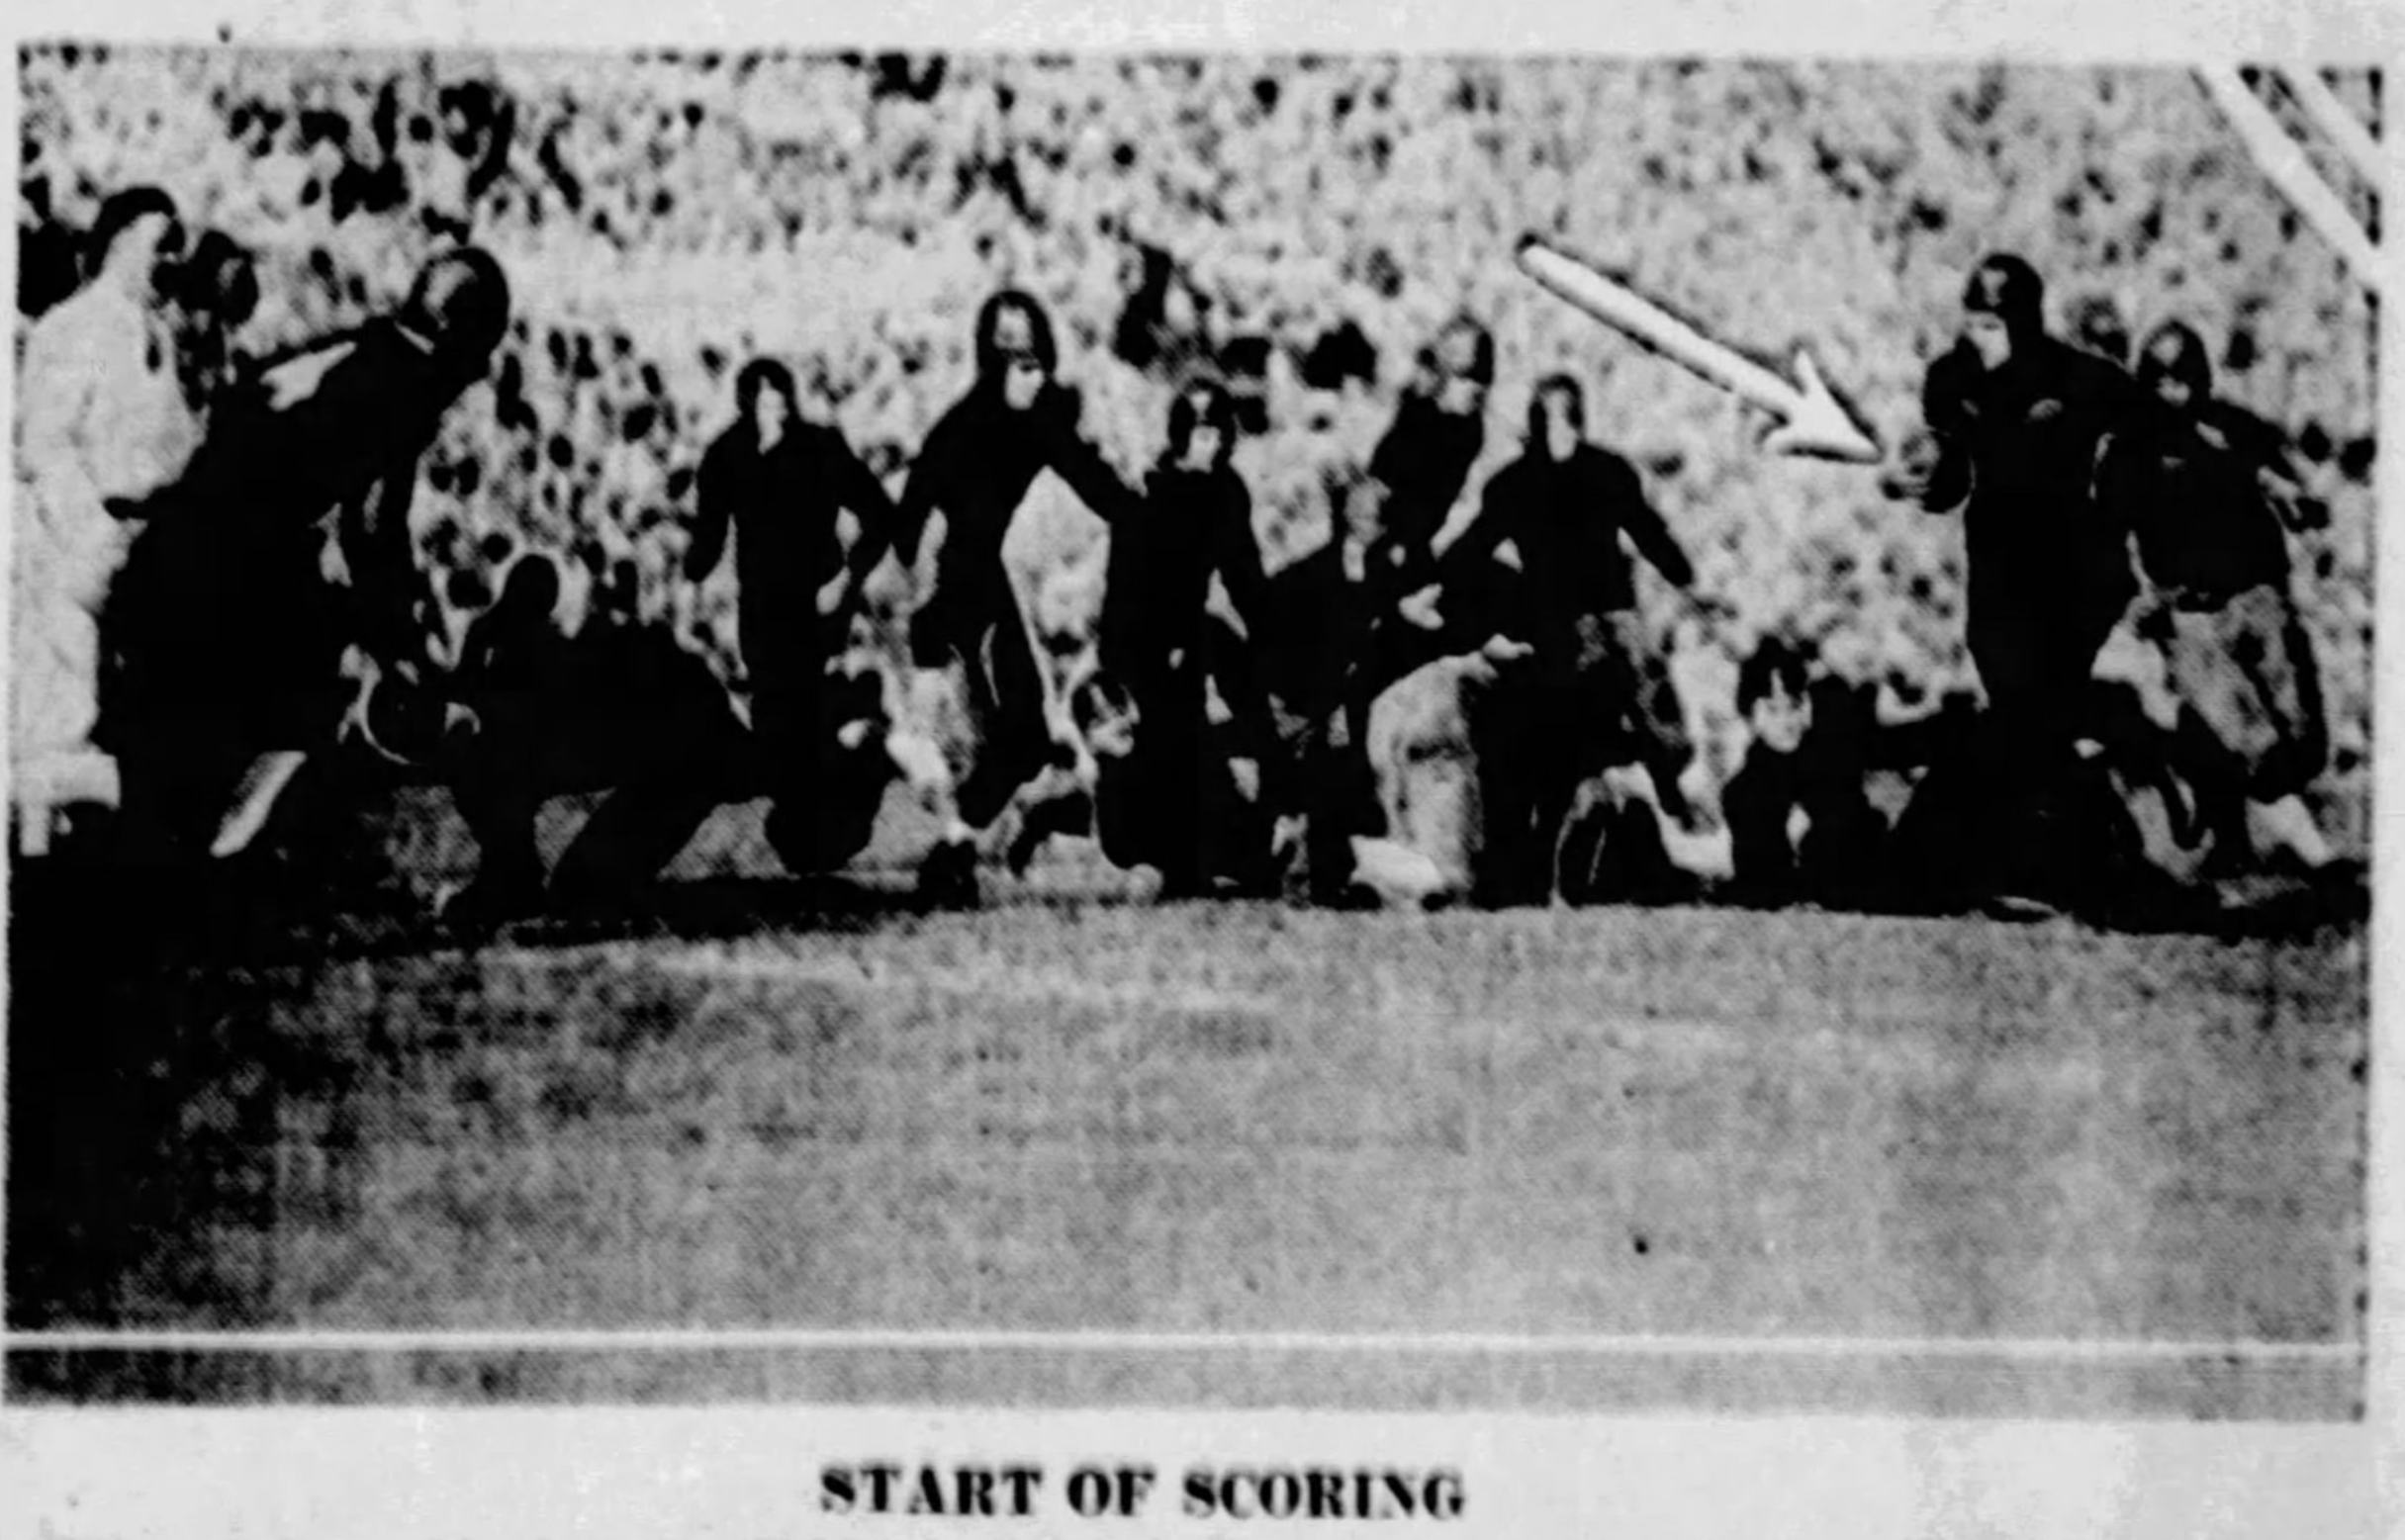


QUAKERS SCORE ON A "BREAK"

Murphy, Penn halfback, scores touchdown for his team in 13-7 defeat by Chicago in the big intersectional game of Saturday, at Chicago. Chicago punted from behind its goal in the third period, the ball going straight up in the air and coming down barely across the goal. From this point, Murphy scored on the first play. Arrow indicates Murphy.

CHICAGO'S WINNING TALLY

Anderson, Maroon halfback, crosses the goal line for the winning touchdown in the third period of the hard-fought battle. He scored on a lateral pass.



START OF SCORING

Picture shows Mendenhall, Chicago's left halfback (indicated by arrow), getting away for the first touchdown in the second period. He went over on this play from the five-yard line. The victory was a sweet one to Old Man Stagg, for it marked the first time one of his elevens ever had been able to win over the University of Pennsylvania.

Finds Bankers Worried Over Stock Speculation.

By B. C. FORBES

IN the South—Oct. 22.—This is being written outside in glorious sunshine, overlooking the sparkling Gulf of Mexico, where hundreds of our leading purse-string controllers, members of the American Bankers' Association, have been sight-seeing and golfing at such heart-winning resorts as the Edgewater Gulf Hotel at Biloxi, Gulfport, pass Christian and that unique new world city, New Orleans, where Latin and American make so quaint, picturesque, charming a bled.

We are on our way to the great annual convention, at Houston, of the nation's banking brains. Thomas B. Preston, who will be elected the next president, tells me that the attendance will easily exceed 5,000. Many of them have been put in good humor by the hospitality extended by New Orleans, under the guiding genius of R. S. Hecht, recently awarded a trophy for having rendered the city greater disinterested public service than any other citizen.

WHAT'S on the minds of America's bankers?

Many tell you, "Oh, nothing special. Everything's going along fine."

From others one gathers, however, that the stock market is regarded as fraught with dangerous possibilities and that precautionary steps are being urged and taken.

FEW bankers have as much courage as John J. Mitchell, of Chicago, who recently issued a public warning against continued unbridled speculation in Wall Street. I find, however, that other bankers, particularly those outside of New York, have begun to "swing redlights in the face of their own customers," to use James J. Hill's famous phrase.

NO apprehension is voiced over industrial or other business conditions or prospects.

It is the New York market's ongoings and the possible upshot thereof that are arousing concern. There have been rumors in Wall Street of calling of loans and of cutting down the amounts lent on stock market collateral. I am inclined to think, from what I hear, that many bankers are not today willing to accept stocks at the usual discount of their quoted price. In other words, more adequate marginal protection is demanded.

H[illegible] points registered by [illegible] bankers in informed [illegible] with them:

[illegible] Hazelwood of the [illegible] Company of Chi[illegible] line for the presidency of the A. B. A.:

"Well-managed banks have been strengthening their secondary reserves by increasing their call loans, their government securities, their acceptances, their commercial paper. Should the stock market suffer a relapse severe enough to affect business, the banks, as a whole, are better prepared to stand a shock than they would have been two years ago.

"Many banks are doing what those in agricultural sections have been advising farmers to do, namely, practicing diversification. They are diversifying their reserves. It would be a good thing if all banks did this. If Iowa banks, for example, had done it you would not have seen nearly so many failures among them.

"Business is off about 10 per cent. But there is nothing fundamentally the matter with it."

CHARLES A. HINSCH, president Third-Fifth Trust Company, Cincinnati, and ex-president of the A. B. A.:

"I am conservatively optimistic. Those concerns that have kept themselves thoroughly modernized in machinery, methods and efficiency have been and are able to secure a generous amount of business and to earn satisfactory profits. Other concerns have not.

"Crops for the most part are so bountiful that many farmers are paying off loans and mortgages and are beginning to reach out for an additional farm—the ambition of nearly all progressive farmers.

"The lending of money to Europe, which is more or less a duty, and which could be safe if conducted conservatively, will help to develop for us markets which we need for our surplus."

MR. PRESTON of Chattanooga:

"High prices are helping the whole South. The benefits are widely distributed. Conditions are certainly much better than a year ago."

STOCKS ADVANCE AS OPERATORS OPEN DRIVE

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—(AP.)—An over-extensive short interest in many stocks was given a severe twist in today's stock market, when operators for the advance mustered their forces for a vigorous campaign. Hopes of a good rally had been aroused by the market's indifference to over-Sunday news of an unfavorable character.

This included the transforming of large reserves of clearing house banks into a deficit of more than $42,000,000, shown in Saturday's report; explicit details of the new Ford car, which is expected to furnish powerful competition to other automobile makers; naming of a receiver for the Wickwire-Spencer Steel Company, and a poor earnings report by Marland Oil, likewise had little effect on the day's recovery of prices.

Some liquidation of impaired margin accounts occurred at the outset, as was to be expected after the recent sharp decline of many speculative issues, but various stocks were staunchly supported and the whole list began to rise in a spirited fashion. Banks called some $15,000,000 in loans, to strengthen their weakened reserve position, without a serious strain on the credit situation.

By early afternoon a profusion of 2 to 3 point advances was scattered through the list. United Drug and Sterling products were up 7, International Harvester 6½, Commercial Solvents, Baldwin and Houston Oil 5⅝, and Case Threshing Machine, American Express and General Asphalt 4 each.

CHICAGO BOARD

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—With favorable weather today facilitating rapid movement of the Canadian crop all deliveries of wheat again cut under the season's low price record. Corn also turned easier, influenced by large receipts here, 524 cars. Opening unchanged to 1⅛c off wheat later showed losses all around.

At noon wheat was ⅛c net lower to an equal advance and corn ⅛c to ⅛c up.

Corn started at ⅝c decline to ⅛c advance and subsequently underwent a general sag.

Oats were easy.

Provisions headed downgrade.

Auspicious conditions today for swift marketing of wheat by Canadian farmers were accompanied by reports that timely rains have put Argentine wheat in good shape and that the Australian crop outlook is less pessimistic owing to helpful moisture in dry sections. Besides, Liverpool quotations today were lower than due and the amount of wheat on ocean passage showed an increase both over last week and year ago.

In addition to the fact that today's receipts of corn in Chicago were on a much larger scale than of late, advices were at hand that Illinois corn is turning out to be of a quality easier handled than last year when a large proportion of the crop was unsound. Favorable weather for curing the grain this season is the reason given for the difference. Included in today's arrivals here was a car of new corn from Oklahoma.

2 DIE IN W. VA. TRAIN WRECK

GRAFTON, W. Va., Oct. 24.—(AP.)—Two trainmen were killed in a collision between two Baltimore and Ohio Railroad freight trains near Buckhannon last night. The victims were James E. Tierney, 55, engineer, and C. Thomas Baker, 24, brakeman. Both live in Grafton.

Tierney and Baker left Cassaway yesterday afternoon with a freight. At Hampton their train collided head-on with another train. Both engines were telescoped. The two trainmen were dead when they were removed from the wreckage.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND VIEWS

Offer Continental Oil Bonds.

The National City Company and Carl H. Pforzheimer & Co., are offering at 99 and interest to yield 5⅛ per cent, a new issue of $12,000,000 Continental Oil Company 10-year, 5½ per cent gold debentures, due November 1, 1937. The company reports for nine months to September 30, 1927, net income was $4,128,241 after inventory adjustment, but before depletion and depreciation.

Sept. Trade Showing Better.

Business in September outstripped both the August trade operations and those in September, 1926, according to the Commerce Department at Washington. This improvement was measured by the yardstick of the country's volume of check payments, and was reflected in reports on retail trade. Sales of mail order houses and 10 per cent chain stores alike exceeded those of September last year. Distribution of goods, however, as shown by figures on car-loadings, declined from a year ago. Prices paid to producers of farm products averaged higher than in either the preceding month or the corresponding month of 1926. Wholesale prices were also generally higher than in the preceding month, but were still below the level of last year. Retail prices for food averaged higher than in August, but were lower than in September of 1926.

Second Liberty Loan Bonds.

In a further move to reduce the total of second Liberty loan bonds outstanding, Secretary Mellon has made a new offer to purchase them from holders until next Saturday. The Treasury will pay 100 2-32, or 1-32 less than last week. It will retire the bonds through the sinking fund. They will cease to bear interest November 15. More than $500,000,000 were outstanding prior to last week's offer.

Rapid Readjustment.

Readjustment has been so rapid that many observers believe the end of the decline will be reached sooner than they had anticipated. Most students had fixed between November 5 and 15 as the period when stocks could be repurchased for investment yield as well as speculative purposes. Now they believe the time for buying will arrive sooner, especially if the market encounters in the next few days a further substantial break. Such a decline generally would be considered as signaling the turn for the better.

Bargain Hunters Look Around.

Several interests reported buying by what they termed "bargain hunters" explaining that they meant purchases from interests out of stocks for some time and who were waiting for a favorable opportunity to repurchase some of the standard issues. Thus far this buying has been on a scale and many orders have been filed, although not of sufficient proportions to offset liquidation by holders who remained in stocks too long and were forced to sell on the decline.

Johns-Manville Oil Conservation.

Engineers of Johns-Manville Corporation have completed an extensive application of company's methods of oil conservation to storage facilities of several North American oil companies operating in South American oil fields. Chief feature of the plan is insulation and sealing of storage tanks to reduce evaporation, one of the most serious causes of oil loss. On the Magdalena River, in Colombia, the corporation has made installations for Tropical Oil Company, International Petroleum subsidiary; in Brazil, near Rio, for Standard Oil Company of Brazil (Standard of New Jersey); at San Antonio, Chile, for West India Oil Company (Standard Oil of New Jersey) and in Trinidad for Trinidad Leaseholds, Inc., a British owned company.

WARNS AGAINST INVESTMENT TRUSTS

By EDWIN J. CLAPP,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—The words "investment trust" have a very alluring sound, as if these enterprises partook of the security of a trust company and an investment bond.

The average investment trust is nothing of the kind. It is an agency for combining the funds of investors, large and small, for the purchase of diversified securities. It is thus a sort of holding company.

It differs from the holding company in that the investment trust has a more diversified list of holdings and is constantly changing them. Its managers plan to make money not only from interest and dividends on securities held, but also from capital gains, made from buying stocks and bonds when they are low and selling them when they are high.

The safety of a man's money put in an investment trust obviously depends on the way it is handled. If the investor wants to be safe, he had better find out what the proposed trust is like. Some of them are properly described as nothing but blind pools for speculation, the unsuspecting investor putting his money into the hands of managers who use it to buy on margin, sell stocks short and gamble as they choose.

PROTECT SELF

There are no laws as yet defining the information that an investment trust is obliged to make public concerning its operations. Therefore it is up to the individual investor to protect himself. There probably will be a law in this state when the state attorney general gets through his present investigation of investment trusts. Most of them are sound and are going to be benefited by the action of the attorney general in separating the sheep from the goats.

What information should an investor require before putting his money into an investment trust?

If it is a trust with a fixed, unchanging list of securities in the portfolio, we should know how wide is the spread between the total value of those securities and the price at which the investment trust issue is being sold. If the spread is large, the investment trust is suspicious.

In the case of the investment trust whose portfolio is constantly changed by managers, the investor should know much more. He should know exactly who the managers are, their experience and whether they are the kind of men he would entrust his money to.

He should know whether the rules of the investment trust require a wide diversification (which is needed for safety) and whether it is forbidden to put money into small, untried companies.

WHAT IS REMUNERATION

How much of the junior securities of the investment trust were issued to its promoters? How much money was put into it by its managers; that is, how much have they got themselves at stake? What is the basis on which they are remunerated, and what contingent contracts have they purchasing stock at agreed option prices?

Are the managers forbidden from dealing with themselves, or are they investment bankers not estopped from unloading their firms' cats and dogs on the investment trust, particularly in times of stress?

Does the investment trust periodically publish a complete report giving a detailed list of the various securities in its portfolio? Or does it even, in its annual report, give considerable details such as percentages of the various types of securities held? Or does it even publish an annual report, showing total net earnings? Or is it really a "blind pool," giving no information whatever?

The last five months have seen an enormous increase in the number of investment trusts. It is said that today there are 95 of them with $400,000,000 of assets. They are filling a very important need in the country's investment field. Some of them are above reproach. Some of them should not be allowed to go on attracting money used in taking gambling risks when the investor is under the delusion that he is putting his funds where they will avoid risk.

SUGAR MARKET.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—The raw sugar market was unchanged early today at 4.68c for Cuban, duty paid, with no sales reported.

The raw sugar futures market was steady, but trading was of extremely small proportions, with the trade in general inclined to limit operations and await developments in Cuba. Nothing official was reported from Cuba either as to the date of the start of the new crop or as to any restriction plan. Private advices said the limitation decree may be delayed, and until this is out of the way there seems to be little incentive to make fresh commitments. Prices were steady on a little covering and trade buying with offerings light and at midday were about net unchanged to 1 point higher.

Business in refined sugar continues of a hand-to-mouth character, with prices unchanged at 5.90c to 6.10c for fine granulated.

NEW YORK BOND MARKET

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—(AP.)—New offerings supplied the principal interest in bond circles today, while the listed market was extremely quiet, with price changes few and small. Prompt oversubscription was reported of the $29,000,000 Federal Land Bank and $12,000,000 Continental Oil issues, offered this morning. New issues in prospect include $20,000,000 Canadian Cement Corporation 5½s, expected on the market within a short time.

A renewal of the Treasury Department to buy in Second Liberty 4¼s at 100 3-32 also attracted attention. The original offer expired on Saturday and the present one will remain open all this week. The Second Liberties have been called for redemption on November 15. The action was without effect upon the price of government securities.

Fairly large offerings of a few liens, such as Chesapeake Corporation 5s, Erie Refunding 5s, Missouri Pacific 5s and Mobile and Ohio 4½s, were well absorbed in today's trading, prices holding close to Saturday's final quotations. Some of the St. Paul issues, which have been moving forward, inclined to heaviness on profit-taking.

Foreign obligations were dull, with fractional declines well scattered through the list. Most of the German and French issues were steady.

WALL STREET BRIEFS

Argentine Trade Gains.

Argentine foreign trade for the first eight months of 1927 amounted to $1,250,000,000 (gold pesos) against $1,122,000,000 for eight months last year. There was a favorable balance of $187,000,000 compared with a favorable balance of about $9,000,000 a year ago. Volume and price of imports this year increased greatly, so did exports.

Coal Still Easy.

The easier price trend in bituminous coal for several weeks past continues, especially in the territory east of the Mississippi, Coal Age News reports. The prevalence of mild temperature has had a deterrent effect on demand for domestic grades. Large consumers of steam coal, with reserves well in excess of requirements, are disposed to await developments, meantime picking up occasional lots of distress tonnage.

Oil Price Advanced.

Sinclair Oil and Refining Company has advanced kerosene one-half cent a gallon at New York, Philadelphia and Atlantic coast terminals, to 7½ cents.

Lackawanna Net Falls.

September net operating income of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western declined to $1,714,623 from $1,990,534 a year ago, and for nine months of 1927 to $12,658,104 from $13,976,647 in the same period of 1926. September gross dropped $673,274.

SENTENCE W. VA. EMBEZZLER

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 24.—Directors and stockholders of the Citizens National Bank, of Martinsburg, W. Va., from which he pleaded guilty to embezzling $29,958.28, made a special plea for leniency in behalf of Ray B. Dailey, former bookkeeper of the bank, when he was arraigned in Federal Court here today. He was sentenced to 18 months at Atlanta by Judge W. E. Baker.

Assistant United States District Attorney Frank H. Parrack, stating that the case was most unusual, told the court the directors of the bank themselves had made restitution of the funds taken. Dailey has a wife and child.

ASK CITY FUNDS TRANSFERRED

An ordinance transferring $98,758 from various funds to the Bureau of Highways and Sewers was presented in City City Council today. The bureau's funds are exhausted and, if the transfer is not made, its work must be stopped and more than 600 employes laid off until the first of the year.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—(AP.)—There were many mixed movements all through the day in various active stocks on the curb market, but advances made in a number of issues, quickly were followed by a wavering tendency. At the same time many issues that showed declines in the early trading improved their position in the later trading.

Ford Motor of Canada commanded special attention because of the expected appearance of new models, but after advancing 6 points to 550, fell back to 542. Reo was heavily traded at close to 26, while Stutz, after an early gain, reacted. Franklin Manufacturing was in supply at moderate concessions.

Oil stocks were in fair demand with some strong features. Chesbrough entered new high ground at 126, on an advance of over 5 points. Continental Oil was heavily traded again making a fractional gain and a number of other issues, including Humble and Gulf, showed gains in the first half of the day. Vacuum, after advancing a point, reacted.

Utilities were irregular. Commonwealth Edison dropped over 3 points and American Gas and Electric lost more than a point in the early trading which was turned into a gain in the next few transactions. Northern States Power was in supply and yielded about a point.

Railroads generally were heavy. Pittsburgh and Lake Erie dropped about 3 points and St. Paul preferred, after advancing over a point to 38¼, dropped back to 37.

There were mixed changes in the industrials. Fajardo Sugar, which was weak on Saturday, advanced nearly 5 points and then fell back about 2 points. Gobel moved up over a point and Deere & Co. had an advance of a point. Cuban Tobacco certificates rose 3 points to 46. Grant Stores dropped 3 points, while Dominion Stores had an advance of 2 points.

Ark and Lone Star Active Here

Trading activity centered in Lone Star Gas and Arkansas Gas on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange today with both stocks changing hands in large volume. During the early part of the session neither stock veered much from the general level at which it had been selling for the past two or three days, Lone Star holding close to 51½ and Arkansas selling at 8⅞ and 9.

Revival of the rumor that Arkansas Gas will shortly figure in a transaction whereby its gas properties will be turned over to a holding concern dominated by Cities Service interests was responsible for the flurry in that issue, while the activity in Lone Star was attributed to purchasing in anticipation of favorable dividend action late this year or early in 1928. There was not much trading in the other oil and gas issues.

Miscellaneous shares were substantially unchanged from previous closings, but prices were steady and the general tone was helped to some extent by the early firmness in the New York market.

In the afternoon session Lone Star Gas hardened up and started a slow forward movement. There was a rather heavy volume of stock available at the higher notches, however, and progress was retarded by the absorption of the offerings which made their appearance from time to time.

THE PRODUCE MARKET

The demand for fruit and vegetables was slow today at the local wholesale produce district. All vegetables were sold at about unchanged prices. The fruit market was slow and the prices remained about the same.

The poultry market was easy and the demand was slow. In the face of supplies poultry was nominal. Poultry was sold at about unchanged prices.

The butter, egg and cheese markets were firm. No change was made in the quotations on these markets.

Car lot supplies were heavy, a total of 80 cars being on track. Included in the arrivals were 19 cars of apples, 23 cabbage, 2 cantaloupes, 5 cauliflower, 4 celery, 16 grapefruits, 4 lemons, 15 lettuce, 9 onions, 17 oranges, 7 pears, 13 peppers, 3 spinach, 25 potatoes, 14 sweet potatoes, 3 tomatoes and 2 watermelons.

Hay receipts were heavy and the market firm. Grain was light.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—The cotton market opened steady today at an advance of 11 points on October, but generally 1 to 6 points lower under selling, which appeared to be inspired by favorable weather reports in the south and may have been influenced also, by expectations of comparatively large ginning figures from the census bureau tomorrow.

December eased off to 19.48c and March to 19.70c, in early trading, net declines of 10 to 15 points, but there was trade buying and covering at these figures rallied prices 8 to 10 points from the lowest by the end of the first hour.

Private cables attributed an early advance in Liverpool to Continental and Bombay buying, which was followed by reactions under realizing on more favorable weather reports from the south.

The market was quiet later in the morning but held fairly steady after the early decline, with prices showing rallies of a few points on covering. Local brokers said the market acted as if it were waiting for tomorrow's census report or fresh developments otherwise. At midday December was ruling around 19.56c and March, 19.78c, or about 2 to 4 points net lower on the more active months.

BARR ATTACKS COLEMAN SPEECH

Assistant Superintendent of Police Leo S. Coleman used "the language of the underworld to express himself" when he attacked Charles C. McGovern in a speech last Friday, former State Senator C. M. Barr declared today at the noon meeting in the Independent party headquarters, 123 Fourth avenue.

"Coleman is not to be criticized too severely," said Barr. "He is more to be pitied than condemned. His conduct has made it apparent that he is a creature of the machine. He would like the rest of the force to pattern themselves after the machine mold that made him what he is. He is no more representative of the rank and file of the police department than is Charles Golden representative of the fire department. Golden is the city fire captain who was convicted the other day by a jury in Criminal Court in connection with the Zak-Malie legislative election in 1926."

The Coleman speech is merely another indication of the effort of the "machine" to control the lives of the citizens of the county, Barr said. He charged that while the Republicans "have displayed their own signs from every vantage point they could seize, including public property," they are defacing and besmirching the Independent party posters.

"Regardless of the underworld methods employed by the enemies of McGovern and Shields, the Independent party will continue to present its case to the people in a constructive way, ignoring the low language and actions of those who would try to drive this campaign to the level of the gutter," said Barr.

Coleman, speaking to the South Side police last week, charged that McGovern had tried to take away witness fees from the police, that as an officer on the Mexican border he had tied one of his men down on the hot sand and that he had fired two bullets into one of the Biddle boys who was dying. "I've heard him called a rat and I think he is a rat," said Coleman.

INGROWN NAIL

Turns Right Out Itself

"Outgro" is a harmless antiseptic manufactured for chiropodists. However, anyone can buy from the drug store a tiny bottle containing directions.

A few drops of "Outgro" in the crevice of the ingrowing nail reduces inflammation and pain and so toughens the tender, sensitive skin underneath the toe nail, that it cannot penetrate the flesh, and the nail turns naturally outward almost over night.

HITS M'GOVERN PLAN ON BONDS

Adoption of proposals advanced by Controller C. C. McGovern would cost Allegheny county thousands of dollars annually, former County Solicitor Oscar T. Taylor declared today at the noon meeting in Republican headquarters, Hotel Henry.

As an instance, Taylor charged that McGovern insists that all authorized bonds be sold immediately and the money kept in the banks until needed, instead of following the present practice of using funds in hand for current obligations and selling bonds as necessary to take care of floating obligations. Should the bonds be sold according to the McGovern plan, Taylor said, the county would have to pay interest on them at the rate of 4¼ per cent, together with a four-mill state tax, while it would receive only 2 per cent for the funds deposited in the banks. The saving under the present system, the speaker said, is about $40,000 a year.

Mr. Taylor attacked McGovern and Shields for bolting the party after they were unsuccessful at the primary, saying: "Either they are not Republicans or they do not believe in majority rule, the underlying bulwark of our system of government."

Congressman Harry A. Estep was another speaker.

M'GOVERN SHIFT QUESTIONED

Announcing that he is carrying on the fight for an independent Controller that has been abandoned by Independent party leaders, Thomas J. McGovern, Democratic nominee for that place, issued a statement last night asking for support.

"Only a few weeks ago we were told by these leaders that the public welfare demanded the election of a controller who would be the watchdog of the treasury," he said. "Why have they dropped the fight for Controller? Is it merely a scheme to promote the personal interests of Mr. McGovern—a desperate effort to land him the minority job on the board of County Commissioners which rightfully belongs under the spirit of the law and the constitution to the real minority pa[illegible] of this county?"

ADVERTISING CLUB MEETING TOMORROW

THE BUNGLE FAMILY . . . . The Political Bug Bites Deeply

THOSE THREE MEN WHO CAME HERE TO SEE ME ARE THE ADVANCE AGENTS FOR THE ANNUAL WASH-UP-POLITICS WEEK. THEY FEEL THAT HONEST GEORGE BUNGLE WOULD GET MORE THAN ONE VOTE AT AN ELECTION.
OH, DON'T BE SILLY GEORGE BUNGLE. DON'T PERMIT ANYONE TO GET YOU EXCITED ABOUT POLITICS.
THERE'S NOTHING TOUGH ABOUT RUNNING FOR OFFICE. YOU SIMPLY SQUEEZE FOUR OR FIVE HUNDRED HANDS A DAY, AND HOLLER YOUR HEAD OFF ABOUT GIVING THE TAXPAYER $260 WORTH OF SERVICE FOR A NICKEL.
MY SISTER ANNIE'S HUSBAND WENT INTO POLITICS. HE NEVER AMOUNTED TO ANYTHING AFTERWARD.
HE NEVER AMOUNTED TO ANYTHING BEFORE THAT EITHER! HE WASN'T IN POLITICS. ALL HE DID WAS HELP CARRY A DRUM AND GET ARRESTED FOR STARTING DIZZY ARGUMENTS WITH VOTERS ON ELECTION DAY.
AT ALL HOURS OF THE NIGHT, ANNIE TOLD ME, MEN WOULD COME TO THEIR HOUSE TO HAVE FILBERT GET SOMEONE OUT OF JAIL.
AND ALL HE EVER GOT OUT OF IT WAS THE FEELING THAT HE'D BE LOWERING HIMSELF BY TRYING TO MAKE A LIVING FOR HIS FAMILY.
THE MAIN REASON FILBERT NEVER GOT ANYPLACE IS BECAUSE HE RODE AROUND ON POLITICAL BANDWAGONS IN THE SAME WAY THAT A MAN-ABOUT-TOWN RIDES IN TAXICABS. EVERY TIME I MET HIM HE WAS FIGURING ON JOINING A NEW PARTY.

ELLA CINDERS . . . . The Higher-Ups

After all of Ella's efforts to get rid of the Nihilist, it's sticking to her like chewing-gum to a high heel.
THE FIRST THING WE MUST DO IS SHAKE OFF OUR NIHILIST NEMESIS—HE'S HARDER TO LOSE THAN A BASS DRUM!
I WISH HE WAS AS EASY TO BEAT!
TOP FLOOR, PLEASE—WE HAVE A CONFERENCE WITH THE HIGHER-UPS!
UNLESS A CERTAIN LOW-DOWN PARTY FOLLOWS US!
WELL, IF OUR NIHILIST FRIEND DOESN'T DROP OFF, I CAN JUST DROP OFF NOW ABOUT GETTING RID OF THIS SINISTER SUITCASE......
OGEEGOSH! THAT SPY—HE MUST'VE STOLEN A MARCH ON US!
YES—I WISH HE'D STEAL OUR STUFF INSTEAD! I HOPE WE CAN GIVE HIM THE SLIP ON THE STAIRS!

In half the States in the Union it is now possible for murderers, sentenced for life, to be paroled after five years.

Why not go a step further and merely provide turnstiles at the penitentiaries?

Or, when convicted, sentence the prisoner to send a postcard to the warden.

* * *

The present system of jurisprudence is subject to severe criticism. The average person, charged with a felony, finds court trial an inconvenience.

To say nothing of the expense.

* * *

Wouldn't it be nicer to issue pardons at the Postoffice?

Like stamps.

FEARLESS JOURNALISM

(News Item.)

"There was hardly standing room in the drug store and both barber shops last night, with everybody anxious to listen to the radio and hear about the fight. The only unpleasant feature for the listeners was the noise made by Alph Gösslin, who was considerably under the weather. Somebody ought to take care of him when he gets that way."

The Rev. Mr. Wiley says—"A woman is never happy until she has made some man miserable—a man is never miserable until he has made some woman happy."

And then there's the absent-minded flapper who sat in a hotel lobby and forgot to cross her knees.

FRISBY DETERMINED TO FIGHT FOR RIGHT

Makes Firm Resolve to Help Prohibition Forces; Duty as Well as Privilege

One of Mr. Frisby's treasured possessions—a snapshot which he says shows him making hay with Calvin Coolidge.

BY MR. FRISBY

(Our Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—As I sit here on the edge of the bed I am determined to put a stop to something or other, and expose this and that.

Or better still—I believe I will get a job with the prohibition enforcement forces.

And why not?

A man is entitled to something in this life besides work, work, work. Sometimes I feel as though I couldn't fill my fountain pen again. I, Mr. Frisby, am entitled to own a few apartment houses and a Rolls-Royce. Others are. So am I. Yes, I am.

We are, in this world, what we think we are. I think I am a prohibition enforcement agent. I shall go from house to house, demanding that the law violators stop sneezing at the Eighteenth Amendment. If people slam the door in my face, I shall ring the doorbell. I will simply sit down on the steps and await developments. I shall not take no for an answer. If they have spirituous liquors I shall insist that they turn them over. I know a fellow who can turn them over again.

And when this country is rid of vile but intoxicating beverages I shall . . . what I mean to say is that I intend to help rid the country of intoxicating beverages I shall, do my part.

At least, these are the thoughts that are bursting like skyrockets in my mind this morning. I'm so nervous I hardly know which way to turn a trick.

BUGS BAER Says

OUTSIDE of informing us that his new car will make the old one look like a flivver Hank Ford has rattled no information about his plans.

We understand that the 1928 scooter will be the usual motor car with improved license plates and a four-wheel base.

Whatever Henry does with his new Christmas blueprints, we hope he sticks to his old style radiator cap.

ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER.

He is the only manufacturer of traffic jams who realizes that pedestrians bruise very easily. His radiator cap has always been considerate of the feelings of jaywalkers and curbhoppers.

It is small, round, and has no rough edges. Many a crossing tourist has absorbed bumps from Henry's flivvers with nutritious effects, hanging on the hood with both hands and using the Ford radiator cap for a teething ring.

The manufacturers of other boulevard tanks are not so considerate. Some years ago an eggheaded designer of chummy roadsters got the idea that radiator caps should be beautified.

The old cap looked like a tomato can on a picket fence. So he replaced it with a bronze eagle with outstretched wings and a razor-edged beak.

When a boulevard jumper got sideswiped, he not only was embossed by the bumper, stung by the head lights and hamburgered by the fenders but he was also clawed by the eagle and had his nose bitten by its sharp beak.

This was such a good idea that the next radiator weapon was an iron statuette of Jack Dempsey with his right hand stuck out in front of the car. Many a pedestrian took a punch in the jaw from this tough little man.

Now, a chauffeur puts anything on his radiator hood that he feels like. It is bad enough to get bumped, but it's worse to get chewed by a silver bulldog.

Some hoods are so full of dangerous ornaments that they look like an anarchist's parlor mantlepiece.

Which is why we have always been thankful to Ford. He never included bayonets, jig-saw puzzles and bronze leopards among his spare parts.

The idea of radiator jabbers is growing fast and we can soon expect to see a car equipped with a pair of meat axes or tailor's scissors on its hood.

A sausage machine wouldn't be a bad idea when a car bumps a small citizen. But we know that Ford will cling to his old style radiator cap, even if it is ugly. If he thinks that he must put an ornament on the radiator we hope that it will be a hypodermic needle or a sponge soaked in iodine.

Men Believe Silly Things

What Nonsense They USED to Believe.

Francis Bacon, who by the way did NOT "write Shakespeare," was one of the three greatest thinkers that the world has known. Another of the three was Aristotle, the Greek. You may select your own third.

Bacon took "all knowledge for his province," wrote on every conceivable subject, and died of a cold contracted when he got out of his coach to stuff the carcass of a hen with snow, to see whether the cold would preserve the flesh. That experiment was the forerunner of all the refrigerator cars you see today.

Bacon's chief interest was in abstract thought, the beliefs of men, the science of his day, the "wisdom of the ancients," and the scientific thought that he originated. He is practically the father of mental scientific experiment, first of the great school of students that have taken facts upon which to base theory and generalization, whereas the ancients took their theories and forced the facts to agree with them.

Read Bacon's wisdom of the ancients, brief presentations of strange things that men believed for centuries, inconceivable follies that were taught as religious truths, in Greece and elsewhere, and you will not wonder that men believe in follies, superstitions and bigotries today.

Bacon's plan was to tell the ancient beliefs briefly, then write his own conception as to the probable meaning of the mythological teaching.

It would interest you probably to try the same experiment, for all of those ancient stories, ridiculous as they sound, have some real meaning in life, teach some lesson and express in the fairy tale language of humanity's infancy truth and the experience of the race as far as it had progressed.

For instance, take:

THE STORY OF NARCISSUS—Narcissus is said to have been extremely beautiful and comely, but intolerably proud and disdainful, so that, pleased with himself and scorning the world, he led a solitary life in the woods, hunting only with a few followers, who were his professed admirers, amongst whom the nymph Echo was his constant attendant. In this method of life it was once his fate to approach a clear fountain, where he laid himself down to rest, in the noonday heat, when, beholding his image in the water, he fell into such a rapture and admiration of himself that he could by no means be got away, but remained continually fixed and gazing, till at length he was turned into a flower of his own name, which appears early in the Spring and is consecrated to the infernal deities, Pluto, Proserpine and the Furies.

So Bacon tells the story of Narcissus, a handsome young man who could admire nobody but himself, or care for anything else.

What do YOU make out of that ancient belief, which is a fable with a meaning?

Bacon saw in it principally the curse that falls upon the very vain man, the very good-looking youth—

"which at first flourishes, and is talked of, but, when ripe, frustrates the expectation conceived of it."

And he adds:

"And that this flower should be sacred to the infernal powers carries out the allusion still further—because men of this humor are perfectly useless in all respects; for whatever yields no fruit, but passes, and is no more, like the way of a ship in the sea, was by the Ancients consecrated to the infernal shades and powers."

To Americans, who possess among our national curiosities a number of these human narcissus flowers, there seems to be an especially appropriate and interesting feature in the fact that the original Narcissus had as his constant companion the only thing that he really liked besides himself, "the nymph Echo."

The modern Narcissus, self-indulgent, conceited, is beautiful, not in face, but in fortune. Unfortunately rich, and unhappily free from any doubt as to his own perfections, he is a very numerous product of this rich Republic.

Cursed with money that they haven't earned, and do not know how to use usefully, these young gentlemen, and old gentlemen of the useless spending Narcissus class, also take for their favorite THE NYMPH ECHO.

This is in effect an echo of themselves. Whatever they say, the fawning parasite, Echo, repeats.

Their words are echoed over and over, until they actually begin to believe that they have a meaning.

You may well pity the poor creatures and pity also the flatterer who plays the part of Echo to the modern Narcissus. If only they, like their ancient brother, might change into flowers, and thus stop eating and drinking and wasting what workers produce!

Smocks for Teachers?

Good Idea for Any Woman

Teachers in Michigan, requested by the school board to wear smocks, express indignation and refuse. The smocks are to come within ten inches of the floor. The teachers say they will stand firm, and that, of course, is their constitutional right.

Their objection, however, is unwise. Smocks covering fine clothes, or, better still, worn in place of the usual dress, with an opening under the arms to admit air, are, according to the learned James Swinnerton, much like the costumes of old Indian cliff dwellers, ideal for health.

A school should be businesslike, and teaching is an ART. No great artist is ashamed to wear a smock at work in the studio. Her schoolroom is the TEACHER'S STUDIO; the children are the soft clay with which she shapes better men and women.

A businesslike smock, of pretty bright blue or pink cotton, would be most sensible, set a better example than short skirts and "nude" stockings, save the teacher's clothes.

But, of course, there should be no compulsion, only suggestion. The teacher may wear what she chooses—life, liberty and PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS extend even to the schoolroom.

2. Proportional representation in the United States Senate, no state to have less than two Senators. Legislation to enforce prompt constitutional reapportionment in the House of Representatives.
3. A separate Department of the Army, of the Navy and of the Air Forces, all united under a Secretary of National Defense.
4. Federal action to the limit of Federal powers to abolish illiteracy in the United States under a Secretary of Education.

Garrett P Serviss Says:

Society and Physics

WHILE the mind is tied to the body it has to share the body's obedience to the great physical principle of inertia. Dr. R. B. Lindsay, of Yale, suggests that this principle, which may be expressed as the reluctance to undergo change characterizing every physical body in the universe, has an application extending far beyond the bounds of the natural sciences; in other words, it applies to social systems as well as to physical systems.

"Has it not often seemed strange," he writes in the Scientific Monthly, "that all the movements toward social reform which most persons are now inclined to recognize as having benefited the human race were bitterly opposed, nay, often fought with tooth and nail? And does it not appear equally curious that the great political and ecclesiastical changes which have taken place in recorded history have in almost every case been at the expense of continual wars and untold bloodshed? Yet these are but illustrations of the generalized principle of inertia."

The great tendency of science today is toward generalization, and generalization, no doubt, may be made subservient to loose speculation outside the legitimate limits of scientific procedure. Hasty and unsound generalizations have wrecked many a theory. Mental power resembles radiant energy in that its intensity varies inversely with the distance; perhaps even with the square of the distance; that is to say, with the area covered. But Dr. Lindsay's idea of the application of the inertial principle to human affairs seems to ring true, and he derives from it some conclusions comforting to those who are sufficiently conservative to not desire to see reform brought about by cataclysm.

Friends of the age-old institution of the family will welcome the suggestion that, though as a social system it is today in "a state of great instability," yet such radical blows at the family as the theoretical movement in Russia to abolish marriage altogether are encountering, because of the principle of social inertia, a resistance among the people showing that "the family is not yet dead, nor will it wholly die," though a modification of the institution may be taking place which will result, after the manner of all nature's changes, in a genuine evolution.

As Dr. Lindsay remarked: "Everyone must have noticed that it is harder to open a heavy revolving door rapidly than it is if one is content to do it slowly. Likewise, in social phenomena, the more radical and impetuous the reform sought the greater is the opposition aroused and the more difficult it is to overcome this opposition."

Violence and haste applied to the production of change result in chaos. Slow and gradual pressure brings about the desired reform in the manner of evolution, instead of that of revolution. By confiding in the effectiveness of the principle of inertia in social and political things pessimism is banished, and the changed state of the world in the future may be contemplated with equanimity by the most hard-boiled conservative. If he could live through the change beginning in his time, he would find that, instead of the frightful precipice he had taken it for, it was only a long, gentle slope down which mankind had glided into a region more paradisaical than any it had before occupied. Inertia is the "governor" of the machine of evolution.

THOUGHTS OF THE GREAT—

The wisdom of the wise and the experience of the ages may be preserved by the quotation.—Isaac Disraeli.

Not mine, this saying, but the sentence of the sage. Nothing is stronger than necessity.
—Euripides.

Once Overs

Secrecy

YOU have known some people for a long time yet you realize you do not know them intimately.

These persons seem to be holding back something.

You think they have not shown their true make-up.

You have never felt at ease with them because you feared that some time unfavorable facts about them would come to light.

Persons who are unduly guarded and evasive about themselves usually are hiding something of which they are ashamed.

Don't place too much confidence in the evasive person.

Practically everyone has done things at some time in their life that they would not like to have generally known.

But when you see that a person is uneasy when an effort is made to learn of his or her past life, there is something about it that is more than ordinarily bad.

After a person has reached the age of complete control and makes an obvious effort to keep certain things secret, don't be misled by present appearances.

Tales That Are Told

Scotch Cheer

A SCOT was entertaining a guest for the night. The evening was spent in weighty conversation, no offer of liquid refreshment being made.

About 10:30 p. m. the host said, suddenly, "Now how about a wee doch-an-doris, eh?"

The guest rubbed his hands and chuckled, "Splendid!"

So the host, smiling genially, rose and put Sir Harry Lauder's celebrated song record on the gramophone.

Easily Explained

THE office manager had forgotten his penknife, and, apparently, the other members of his staff had all forgotten theirs. Finally, he sent for Thomas, the office boy, who fished about in his pockets and produced the desired article.

"How is it," asked the manager, "that you're the only person of my office staff who has a knife with him when I want one?"

"I suppose," replied the boy, with a frank smile, "it's because I can't afford more than one pair of trousers."

New York Day by Day

by O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Diary of a modern Pepys: Up early to walk and a crochety lady looked at my dog and said it was hers, stolen that morning, and I had to escort her to my tavern to convince her I have owned him three years. Came a postcard with an amusing drawing from Ralph Barton in Paris.

After breakfast E. J. Marshall, the ranchman, called, and the finest figure of a man I know, although nearing 70. Also Sloane Simpson, a Rough Rider and friend of Roosevelt, and presented two interesting snapshots of the former president, taken in New Mexico.

All the afternoon at this and that and accomplishing nothing. So to call on Walter Howey and Verne Porter, who have become magazine publishers, but they were out. And to see H. T. Webster, the limner, who has been for a long stay in England, bicycling and glad to be home. Later to hear Ben Bernie and his excellent orchestra.

There is another story, culled from a page of Broadway, of the girl who tried and failed. Her youthful beauty won her immediate place in the chorus about five years ago. She went the pace but drew up short before the final count. Then she renounced Broadway and its comradeship and interested a benevolent gentleman in a new start for her. She quit liquor, cigarets and late hours, studied voice and elocution. Two years were spent in cultural la-de-dah abroad and about a year ago she returned to Broadway—entirely changed. She was given a conspicuous part in a drama. In three weeks she received her notice. The play was to continue without her. And she returned to the fast Broadway pace.

* * *

The most indifferent city toward New York, it seems to me, is its near neighbor—Brooklyn. It has a population of more than 2,200,000 and despite proximity makes no effort to imitate its sister borough. Thousands of its residents make a living in Manhattan, but they are not New Yorkers. They prefer to be Brooklynites. There is a rare dignity about Brooklyn—its fine old homes, wide lawns, porches and churches. There is also an impression of substantial citizenship, which looks upon Broadway much in the same manner Ft. Wayne gazes upon a street carnival. Comic papers have not joshed husbands out of the idea of propelling baby carriages along quiet streets Sunday afternoons. To the average New Yorker, the city "at the wrong end of the bridge" seems as remote as Seattle. It was settled by the Dutch and derived its name from the name they bestowed—Breuckelen.

* * *

Brooklyn never blows a horn. Its newspapers are calm and typographically sedate. Yet it is the most popular borough in Greater New York. After 1860, it advanced more rapidly than any other American city. It was the fourth city in the United States when annexed to New York in 1897. There are many people, otherwise well informed, in the outland who look upon Brooklyn as a suburb of New York.

Williamsburg, Greenpoint, Bushwick, East New York, Flatbush and Gravesend have been annexed by Brooklyn in recent years. Somehow that does not sound particularly thrilling.

The famous Egyptian obelisk or Cleopatra's needle stands a thin, lonely sentinel in the middle of Central Park and it must be mighty lonely for you rarely see a curious crowd around it. Most people give it the same passing glance they would a church steeple. It was a gift from the Khedive of Egypt, who is not khediving any more, and stands 70 feet high and weighs 224 tons. It was erected about 1500 B. C. and originally stood in Cairo in front of the—wait a minute—Temple of the Sun. Bathed in moonlight at night, its graceful beauty is about the most inspiring what-not in the town.

Solidity of Faith

By DR. FRANK CRANE

Come to think of it, faith is about the solidest thing there is. Brick and mortar are nothing to it.

Faith is the foundation of almost all modern commercial structures.

I can walk into a bank here in Los Angeles and give them a check on a bank in New York and it will be freely paid. That is because the Los Angeles bank believes in the New York bank.

It used to be quite a problem for people to travel because they had to take so much money with them. Now all they need is pieces of paper.

You can go anywhere in the world with express checks or similar certificates.

The peddler of bananas on the corner sees and handles all his goods. He doesn't let go of anything until he gets the money. His hand must touch everything.

The great merchant sits in his office and sees nothing, but his ships sail the far seas. Everywhere his employes are making money. He does not see any of it. His fortune rests upon faith.

Faith is therefore not a mere Sunday school virtue, something to preach to goody-good people, but it is the basis of life.

There can be no happy marriage without faith. Those who insist upon knowing every thought and deed of their partners soon come to grief. Unless you believe in one another to a certain extent, what's the use?

It is lack of faith among nations that creates war and misunderstanding. Every nation doubts the purposes of other nations. From doubt it is a short cut to force.

We must believe each other, we must have confidence in human nature or our social structure goes to pieces.

To be sure, one who believes everybody will be bitten, but, as Spurgeon said, one who distrusts everybody will be devoured.

Faith and trust make life comfortable. Distrust is the greatest worrier. If you would have your days easy and your mind free from care, believe in people.

More trouble has been caused by doubting folks than by trusting them.

It does you not much good to believe in God unless you believe also in your fellow man.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS

Song

IT is enough to know today is good, nor will I ask for more, for I have gone in halting, fearful mood too many days before. Too often has the joyous, sunlit hour been shadowed by a doubt until no bud of faith or hope could flower; but now I cast it out. I cast away old fear and old regret, old questionings I leave; today is fair, and 'til its sun be set I shall not sigh or grieve. Today! It is enough. Who asks for more, but asks what none may clasp; no grain of sand from all the future's shore can any seeker grasp. It is enough to know today is bright and filled with song and sun; I shall not yield to any dread or fright until today is done.

EDISON always wanted to meet the late Joseph H. Choate, United States ambassador to Great Britain. Choate said he would go anywhere to meet the great Edison. When they met, Choate, patting Edison's shoulder, said, "I never turn out the light after reading but that I bless the name of 'Edison.'"

THOUGH widely separated by temperament and geography, the late John Burroughs, Henry Ford, Harvey Firestone and Thomas A. Edison had many tastes in common. Camping together was one of their favorite recreations. Left to right, Burroughs, Edison (in his beloved linen duster), Ford and Firestone.

ON one of their trips, the four cronies visited at the Coolidge homestead in Massachusetts. In conversation with Mrs. Coolidge, Edison asked about the President's eating and sleeping. When told that the President slept quite a bit, Edison replied that cutting down on sleep never hurt any man.

A RECENT titled visitor to the Edison laboratories was the Crown Prince of Sweden. A lively conversation, which began in the library, continued in Edison's flivver on the way to lunch. The Prince, who is quite tall, bumped his head getting in, but he took it all in good humor.
